Securities Act And Stock Bill Hit by NRA Industry Aids

Durable Goods Plants Lag as Credit Is Withheld.

Congress Is Urged On to Modification

By Elliott Thurston.

Spokesmen for heavy industry who were asked by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson for recovery recommendations appealed yesterday to Congress to modify the securities act and the pending stock exchange bill.

"Reemployment is being blocked," George H. Houston, chairman of the NRA committee for heavy industry, declared, "by the presence of laws which choke the flow of money and credit into business and by proposed bills that go even further in these obstacles is so vital to recovthat direction. The elimination of ery that we are outlining the steps the Government should take in order that a real business recovery shall be achieved."

More than half of the industrial workers of the Nation are normally employed in the heavy or durable goods industries. Gen. Johnson has estimated that nearly two-thirds of existing unemployment is due to the continued prostration in the heavy industries.

The committee for these industries, appointed at his instance, speaks not only with authority, since it represents the most important manufacturing interests of the country, but it also speaks officially. It was officially created following the recent code conferences called by Johnson.

Bears Out Post Survey.

The committee's findings exactly coincide with the unanimous views of American industrialists, insurance, savings bank and other officials as expressed to The Washington Post in its recent survey. The committee adds to this vast weight of opinion its own conclusions that the securities act and related restrictive laws are throttling private capital, thereby preventing reemployment, blocking recovery and driving the Government toward bankruptcy.

Coincident with the committee's report, the National Industrial Conference Board made public an estimate that upwards of $4,500,000,000 of accumulated demand now exists for new investment capital. It is to release this pent-up flow of capi-

Hamilton Back With Dillinger

Officers Seize Sister of Former But Bandits Again Escape.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., April 22 (AP).—John Dillinger, hoosier desperado, and his first lieutenant, John Hamilton, apparently were reunited tonight after several months' supposed separation in their hiding from the law.

Their whereabouts remained a mystery, but the fact that they again were together came to light with the arrest of Hamilton's sister, Mrs. Isaac Steve, after five Federal operatives flew here and took her into custody for allegedly harboring the two fugitives and a woman companion in her Sault Ste. Marie home last Tuesday night.

Mrs. Steve was held incommunicado in the Chippewa County Jail.

From Hamilton's sister, Federal agents said they learned the two desperadoes and their woman companion fled Wednesday.

Macon Spans U. S. To Rejoin Fleet

Dirigible Moors at Miami From California.

Miami, Fla., April 22 (AP).—Completing a cross-country flight from Sunnyvale, Calif., the Navy dirigible Macon arrived here late today to participate in fleet maneuvers in Caribbean waters.

The giant airship was lashed to the Opa-Locka nast at 7:12 p. m. (Eastern Standard Time), or within 20 minutes after the Macon had settled down above the field for the mooring.

The Macon came in for an easy mooring after circling the area for nearly four hours while officers waited for a mild wind, which had been blowing across the field, to subside.

Olympic Bid Sought.

Berlin, April 22 (AP).—Reports that the Manchukuo government will ask permisison soon to participate in the 1936 Olympic games were circulated here today.

500,000 Cherry Fete Visitors Set Record

$5,000,000 Estimated in Tills of D. C. Stores After Week of Unparalleled Festivity; May Be Made an Annual Affair.

Washington literally set back and gasped last night after a week of festivity unequaled for attendance.

The Cherry Blossom Festival brought more than 500,000 visitors to the city and more than $5,000,000 to local business, it was estimated by officials of the Board of Trade and the Greater National Capital committee, which managed the festival.

A meeting will be called by the District Commissioners soon to consider making the festival an annual event, it was learned.

One civic leader described the festival as "the biggest thing the Board of Trade has ever done." The attendance exceeded that of any inaugural. A dearth of rooms was evident after midnight Saturday.

Thousands of rooms listed with both the Greater National Capital committee and the American Automobile Association were exhausted by Saturday night, and hotels turned away foot-weary visitors. Two appeals to private homes to furnish rooms was made over Station WJSV, and hundreds of residents responded. The first call was broadcast at 11:30 p. m. and the second at 12:45 a. m. yesterday.

While the radio appeals were being made, visitors waited at the offices of the A. A. A. Many were near exhaustion. Others tired of the search for rooms and went to parks or their automobiles to spend the night. A private hospital offered 25 beds, and these were quickly taken.

Most of the visitors came from Maryland, Virginia, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, but every state was represented in the parade of nonresident cars, it was estimated by the AAA.

Many visitors spent yesterday in the city, sightseeing and viewing the cherry blossoms for the last time. The second blossoming of the trees is expected in about two weeks.

Extra police details were called to handle abnormal traffic conditions. Traffic congestion in the

60 Charred Bodies Are Taken From Shaft in Yugoslavia.

Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, April 22 (AP). The number of miners killed in a terrific explosion in Kakanj coal mine near here was estimated officially today at 146, as rescuers continued their efforts to reach those still trapped in distant galleries.

Sixty bodies had been recovered tonight and those still in the mine were listed as certainly dead.

The recovered bodies were charred and mutilated, indicating that death came quickly with the earthquake-like explosion which shook the countryside yesterday.

A graphic account of the explosion was given by a peasant who was plowing in a field nearby.

Earth Heaves.

"The first thing I noticed," he said, "was that my oxen stopped still, standing like statues.

"The next moment there was a thunderous roar; the earth heaved underfoot, and I thought it was an earthquake.

"Then I saw great sheets of flame and dense columns of smoke pouring out of the mouth of the pit. Sirens began shrieking the alarm and a few minutes later the entrance was surrounded by panic-stricken relatives.

"Women, children and old men screamed the names of their relatives down the entrance, which was pouring forth smoke and ashes.

Policeman Fights Old Woman.

"A policeman with difficulty overpowered one old woman who tried to fight her way into the shaft to look for her only son."

All day today bereaved relatives stood around the mine entrance, Christians and Moslems chanting their separate prayers as they swayed with emotion.

One of the men who escaped related that he was blinded temporarily by the blast, but reached safety by hanging onto the tail of the horse he had just unhitched in the gallery. The animal instinctively found its way up and out.

Poison gas hampered the rescue work and several members of the squads were overcome and required hospital treatment.

4 Arabs Go on Trial For Killing American

Bagdad, Iraq, April 22 (AP).—Four Arabs charged with the murder of Ray Fisher, young University of Cincinnati student who was slain in early March while making a canoe trip down the River Euphrates, went on trial today.

A special high court was convened in the tribal town of Diwaniyah, 100 miles south of here. The president of the court is an Irishman while the other judges are natives.

Nats Conquer Macks, 4 to 3; Halt Streak

Schulte Leader in Attack, Pounds Homer; Thomas Goes Route.

By Shirley Povich
(Sports Editor—The Post).

Philadelphia, April 22—It can be done. Washington's club can produce a pitcher capable of going nine innings, and it can win a ball game. This was demonstrated here today as Al Thomas, pitching with his patched arm, and Fred Schulte, swinging with a prolific bat, collaborated to beat the Athletics, 4 to 3, and break a four-game losing streak for the Nationals in the first Sunday ball game to come under the law that attracted 20,306 spectators in this formerly Sabbatical shire.

Thomas, in going a full term for the somewhat bedraggled American League champions, pitched himself a great ball game, despite a tie manufactured by the home side in the eighth inning. Schulte came through with a home run driven into the upper left-field stand in the seventh inning with two of his mates on base to more than offset a score put over earlier in the fray by the A's, then hoisted a high one to left in the ninth to shove across the decisive tally.

Manush Starts Rally.

The telling score in the ninth was started by Heinie Manush after Jack Stone had rolled harmlessly to the second sacker. Heinie bounced the ball off Mahaffey's glove and made first an eyelash ahead of Bill Warstler's throw. Joe Cronin whacked a single that moved the big Dutchman to third, then Schulte lofted that high one that told the tale.

The Nationals were outhit, a dozen safeties to ten, but Thomas was a cagey pitcher outside of that eighth when a homer driven by Frank Hayes, rookie catcher, into

Price-Cutting Tailo May Quit Jail Cell

Judge Promises $100 Fine Will Be Remitted.

Jersey City, N. J., April 22 (AP).—Judge Robert V. Kinkead today indicated that Jacob Maged, tailor, sentenced to 30 days in jail for charging 35 instead of 40 cents for pressing a suit in violation of the State NRA code, may be "given a break" tomorrow.

Maged will be called before Judge Kinkead for a stern lecture. His sentence probably will be suspended and his fine of $100 remitted.

"I believe that Maged has learned that the law has teeth in it and the resultant publicity has convinced others who might be tempted to violate the act that prosecution will follow," Judge Kinkead said.

2 College Youths Arrested In Omaha Extortion Attempt

Omaha, Neb., April 22 (AP).—Two Creighton University freshmen, seized during an attempt to extort $1,000 from Mrs. Sarah Josyln, wealthy civic leader and widow of the founder of the Western Newspaper Union, today faced possible Federal prosecution.

The youths, John E. Flanagan, 17, New York, and Edward Muffitt, 18, Omaha, termed the plot a "prank." United States District Attorney C. E. Sandall said he regarded it as "a serious matter."

Since April 14 Mrs. Joslyn, civic benefactor who donated to Omaha several years ago the Joslyn memorial costing more than $3,000,000, had received three threatening letters, police said. They were turned over to postal inspectors who set the trap with a dummy package resulting in the capture of the youths last night. Flanagan, who maintained today he had received "a terribly raw deal," was arrested on a street car after he had called at the palatial "Joslyn castle" and asked for "that package for Sam" from a maid. He was handed the prepared dummy containing a few small bills.

Muffitt, a star basket ball player, who according to officers admitted he was the author of the plot, witnessed Flanagan's arrest from a nearby seat on the street car a few moments later and slipped away to attend a movie.

Flanagan said he was in no need of money. Muffitt's parents also said their son had everything "he needed."

Spain Torn By Uprising Of Radicals

Widespread Strikes in Capital Flare With Bomb Attacks.

Madrid, April 22 (AP).—Anti-Fascists and Extremists laid siege today to Madrid and surrounding towns, leaving 2 dead and 11 wounded in a series of bitter clashes with their opponents and with the authorities.

The disorders, flaring despite heavy government precautions, were simultaneous with a strike in the capital that tied up transportation services and public utilities, threatening to become general.

Extremists were aroused to a furore by a meeting of 40,000 Catholic youths demonstrating their loyalty to the popular Agrarian party in nearby El Escorial, a huge inclosure combining a convent, a church, a palace and a mausoleum, situated in wild and barren country on a mountainous slope 31 miles from Madrid.

Church Is Bombed.

Heavy property destruction accompanied loss of life and personal injuries in Madrid and its suburbs. Seven bombs were exploded in one church on the outskirts of the city, which was partly burned.

An Extremist was killed and two others were wounded in a clash at Madrid's Puerta Del Sol. A child was killed in a fray between Extremists and guards in the suburb Zallecas. An explosion in the same locality wounded another person.

Later four more bombs exploded in various sections of Madrid, one in a bar, another in a broadcasting station, a third in Arenal street and the fourth at the residence of a parish priest.

English Student Wounded.

A bomb exploded in front of one of Madrid's fashionable hotels, injuring two persons. Throughout the city there was scattered shooting resulting from clashes with guards.

The city was partly in darkness tonight, with municipal gas lamplighters on strike.

Another factor in promoting the disturbances was general dissatisfaction with the recently passed amnesty law. Reports were circulating in the capital that President Alcala Zamora had withheld his signature. This could not be confirmed.

Extremists attempted to cripple the Madrid-Avila Railroad service by dynamiting the tracks near Avila, but damage was slight.

In Barcelona a number of persons suffered minor injuries and five were jailed in a clash between Syndicalists and Young Catholics when the former tried to break up a Catholic meeting.

2 Firms Face U. S. Charges

(Associated Press.)

The Federal Trade Commission announced yesterday it had issued a complaint charging the Carlton Mills Co., Philadelphia manufacturers of knitted fabrics, with misrepresentation of products.

At the same time, the commission announced it had entered a cease and desist order prohibiting the offering by Carlton Mills, Inc., of New York, of free merchandise "when in fact it is not free."

The commission said its records showed no connection between the two companies.

The Philadelphia company manufactures a fabric described as "Persian Kurl," said to be similar in appearance to Persian lamb. The commission said "Persian Kurl" is not Persian lamb, but "is a knitted or woven fabric with a deep curled pile simulating the general appearance of genuine 'Persian' fur."

The New York company was directed to discontinue publishing such phrases as "one shirt free with every three" until and unless a shirt actually is given away without its cost being included in the selling price of the articles sold. The same directions were given as to "free" ties, socks and underwear.

Untermyer Hits Hull's German Trade Policy

New York, April 22 (AP).—Samuel Untermyer, president of the nonsectarian anti-Nazi League, tonight assailed Secretary of State Hull's German trade policies as tending to "open our flood gates to the semi-pauper labor of Germany at the expense of our standards of living."

Untermyer spoke at a concert of the league, which is carrying on an economic boycott against the Nazis. He also called for an investigation of alleged laxity on the part of the Treasury Department in checking misleading labeling of German imports.

7,000 Auto Men to Quit At Cleveland

Fisher Body Employes Demand Recognition and Pay Pact.

Rehiring Dispute Brings Walkout at St. Louis Affecting 3,100.

Cleveland, Ohio, April 22 (AP).—James P. McWeeney, American Federation of Labor organizer and president of the Cleveland Metal Trades Council, announced late today a strike of 7,000 men at the Fisher Body Co. plant here would begin at 7 a. m. tomorrow.

The company made public no statement.

Machinists, tool and diemakers, body makers and practically every craft employed at the plant, all members of the United Automobile Workers Federal Labor Union, No. 18614, will walk out, McWeeney announced. He said the vote was unanimous.

The union seeks wage agreements and recognition, McWeeney said. The strike vote climaxes 10 months of unrest.

On April 10 union officials announced a union committee had been recognized for purposes of collective bargaining. Union officials at that time said the recognition was the first given by the company in any of its plants to a duly accredited union of the American Federation of Labor.

The joint board of adjustment of the local union met today with L. R. Scafe, general manager of the company; E. J. Gleason, production manager; James D. Lyle, personnel director, and Michael J. McCarthy, Detroit, safety director of Fisher Body, to outline grievances.

A working agreement prepared by the union was presented to the management and definite answers requested, John C. Barksites, union financial secretary, said.

3,100 St. Louis Auto Workers Called Out

St. Louis, April 22 (AP).—A strike of 3,100 employes of the St. Louis Chevrolet and Fisher body plants, was called late today by the executive committee of the Federated Automobile Workers of America.

John G. Bostwick, president of the International Automobile Workers organization, said the decision to strike grew out of the refusal of the two companies to reemploy 118 men, most of whom had been active in union affairs, and of company officials to enter into negotiations with the union.

Authority to call the strike was given the executive committee April 12 when 95 per cent of the union's mebership voted to follow the committee's dictates.

In announcing the strike, Bostwick called upon the workers for "peaceful picketing," commencing at the two plants tomorrow.

Laura Ingalls Home With Andean Air Mark

Miami, Fla., April 22 (AP).—Laura Ingalls, Brooklyn aviatrix, was "back home and glad of it" today with the achievement of her goal—the distinction of being the first American woman to fly the Andes alone.

She arrived here at 11 a. m. to complete with a short hop from Havana the 16,000-mile aerial tour of Central and South America which she began in Miami on March 8. She said she probably would continue homeward tomorrow.

Boy Shot by Gunmen In Critical Condition

Lincoln, Neb., April 22 (AP).—The condition of Luceen Marshall, 12, wounded by a gunman's bullet, continued critical tonight, and Dr. George E. Lewis, attending physician, said his chance for recovery was "very remote."

He was wounded Friday noon near the start of a ten-mile gun battle between a police cruiser and an automobile carrying three former convicts identified as bank robbers. One gunman was killed and the other two captured.

Coast Guard Saves 27 As Fishing Boat Sinks

New York, April 22 (AP).—A boat bearing 27 New Jersey men on a holiday fishing trip struck a submerged pile in Fireland inlet off Long Island today and sank.

Coast Guardsman Walter Eldridge, in an observation tower ashore, saw Captain Alfred wave a red flag as the boat, the Picinia, started sinking. A boat was sent out at once and five minutes later picked up the men.

Insull Chats as Ship Rocks in Stormy Sea

S. S. Exilona, April 22 (AP).—Although still complaining of rheumatic pains, Samuel Insull, drawing closer to America and a Chicago courtroom, weathered a rough sea today with apparent ease.

The former utilities magnate did not venture on deck, but spent the hours in the salon chatting. The ship is expected to pass Gibraltar and emerge into the Atlantic about noon Monday.

Cannon's Secretary To Take Stand Today

By Frank Getty.

Miss Ada Burroughs, the solemn, self-effacing "little woman from Virginia," whose part in the alleged conspirary the Government must establish if it hopes to convict Bishop James Cannon, jr., of violating the corrupt practices act, will take the witness stand in her own defense today.

As former treasurer of the "Headquarters Committee, Anti-Smith Democrats," Miss Burroughs reported to Congress only $17,300 of the total of $65,300 contributed to the 1928 Presidential campaign. The prosecution charges she had knowledge of the additional contributions; Miss Burroughs' defense is she had none at the time the final report was made.

The two counts of the indictment on which Cannon and his former secretary are being tried charge them with conspiracy to fail to re-

'Differential' Increased, but Scale Still Exceeds Old Code's.

Roosevelt Asks 21,000 Workers to Get Back on Job.

By Felix Bruner.

A substantial reduction in wages of Southern coal miners under those fixed three weeks ago was ordered last night by the National Recovery Administration in an attempt to bring peace in the Alabama coal fields. Operators in the Alabama field have been refusing to pay the wages previously ordered and as a result 21,000 miners have been on strike.

The new scale, however, still is higher than that provided by the original code and the changes do not affect Northern fields. Thus the differential between wages paid in the North and in the South is widened. The order provides a basic wage in the Alabama field, including Georgia, of $3.80 a day for skilled labor, as compared with $4.60 a day provided in the order of March 31, and $3.40 a day under the original code.

The order was accompanied by a statement by President Roosevelt in which he requested operators to respect the new schedules and asked the miners to return to work under the new rates.

Underselling Forbidden.

A significant provision of the new order is that operators in the Alabama district are prohibited from selling coal in other districts at a price lower than that prevailing in those districts. The section is designed to prevent operators employing cheaper labor from underselling Northern operators, where basic wage scales of $5 or more still prevail.

"All employers are requested to respect their schedules and all employes are requested to go back to work on these rates at once," the President said.

"All employers and trade unions have been most patriotic and considerate in the meantime and we have no criticism to make of either for any action taken up to date. It is now time for all concerned to cease controversy, get back into production on this rate and with least possible delay.

"On the question of Southern wage differentials, the recovery act (section 7c) recognizes differentials according to locality. It is not the purpose of the Administration, by sudden or explosive change, to impair Southern industry by refusing

U. S. Speeding Plans to Form Relief Towns

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

A Federal corporation is being formed to control cooperative farm communities for the benefit of stranded populations.

The corporation, set up under the Emergency Relief Administration, not only will establish a uniform policy for these communities, but will "lend" live stock and tools to share croppers, tenant farmers and others.

Lawrence Westbrook, former Texas relief administrator, is working out the plans for the cooperative communities, which will be similar to the subsistence homestead projects directed by the Public Works Administration. Thousands of acres have been offered the Government as gifts, or at nominal prices for the farm communities.

To Provide Work.

Most of the projects—designed to care for people stranded in cities, oil fields and coal fields, who have some agricultural background—will follow the general outline of the Woodlake Community, operated in Trinity County, Tex., by "Texas Rural Communities," a corporatino.

Westbrook said yesterday that the projects were being planned primarily to provide work opportunities rather than relief. In no instance will gifts be made, he said. Whatever is received eventually will have to be paid for. The Government will retain title to cows, mules or other live stock.

The new Federal corporation will

Inflation Bills Test at Hand For President

Silver Aid, 30-Hour Week, Bank Pay-Off Action Due This Week.

(United Press.)

President Roosevelt faces vital tests of strength this week with organized Congressional minorities attempting to force action on inflationary measures, silver legislation and the 30-hour work week.

The Chief Executive's attitude toward silver failed to satisfy the majority of Western Senators who reviewed all phases of the problem at the White House Saturday.

Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, summoned 30 Senators who are interested in silver and other monetary proposals to meet at 10 a. m. today when Mr. Roosevelt's position will be explained and a plan of action adopted. The committee which conferred with the President met yesterday and prepared its report and recommendations to the large group.

President Fights Curb.

The United Press learned that most of the silver Senators still favor mandatory legislation, although Mr. Roosevelt made it plain at his conference that he would not consider such action and preferred instead purely permissive measures. The President told the conferees he

13 Get Prison In Carol Plot

Eight Army Officers Are Degraded in Addition to 10-Year Terms.

Bucharest, Rumania, April 22 (AP). Eight Rumanian officers, including one who helped King Carol return from exile, and five civilians charged with conspiring against Carol's life today were convicted of high treason and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.

Col. Victor Prekup, who aided the King's dramatic return from Paris four years ago, and the other officers were "degraded" and deprived of their rank. The civilians were fined $1,000 each.

A military court deliberated all night before returning a verdict at 6 a. m. today.

The government charged the alleged plotters planned not only to kill King Carol but also his friend, Mme. Magda Lupescu, members of the King's family and the entire cabinet by bombing the Domniska Balazcha Cathedral at a midnight Easter service.

All those convicted are Transylvanians. They include Gen. Schmidt, head of the poison gas department; Capt. Mocyulzcy, inspector of gendarmerie; Maj. Nicoara, engineering staff; Col. Patraulea, and Prof. Gomoju, leading surgeon and close friend of Princess Helen, former wife of Carol.

Cave Explorer Dies in Plunge Near Floyd Collins Death Pit

Glasgow Junction, Ky., April 22 (AP).—Paul Turner, 25, was killed today while exploring the 65-foot depths of a new cave, and rescue efforts have failed to recover the body, which is wedged between rock about 20 feet from the cave entrance. The cave is about 6 miles from Sand Cave where Floyd Collins lost his life in a similar exploration in 1925.

Turner, accompanied by Donald Byrd, 15, went to the entrance of the cave this morning, and Turner proceeded to lower himself into the unfathomed depths, hoping to develop the cave for tourist purposes. After about five minutes Byrd heard Turner fall, apparently asphyxiated. he boy soon was joined by cave guides and explorers from Glasgow and by 35 CCC workers encamped nearby, but several hours of effort to retrieve the body proved fruitless.

After oxygen was pumped into the cave with long hose, Cal Rogers, Loren Nelson and John Nelson cave guides from Glasgow, descended at 65 feet in a sheer drop, at the bottom of which they found the body. A rope was tied around the body and, after three rescuers reached the surface, an effort was made to draw it to the top. It was hen that the body became wedged between some rock in such a fashion that it was difficult to dislodge it or for the rescuers to descend to it.

Turner, a truck driver for the State highway commission, found the cave when quarry workers located a hole about the size of an orange several days ago. On Friday, Turner enlarged the opening slightly, and built a log fire there, to loosen the rock and enable him to further enlarge the opening. This fire, cave guides believe, caused his death, by using all the oxygen in the cave.

Thousands Jam Town To See Trotzky's Villa

Barbizon, France, April 22 (AP).—Leon Trotzky's shuttered villa was the hub of a great traffic jam today, as thousands of Sunday tourists crowded into the village where the Russian exile was discovered hiding a week ago.

While police kept the crowds moving, no word came from the villa as to what efforts Trotzky is making to leave the country. It was presumed by observers that he still was awaiting the necessary visa to return to Prinkipo Island, where the Turkish Government formerly gave him refuge.

Anglo-Italian Arms Talk May Aid World Cut

Waning Hopes Pinned on London Parley Success.

London, April 22 (AP).—Hopes of curbing the European armaments race and relieving the increased tension between France and Germany tonight were pinned desperately to Anglo-Italian conversations to be inaugurated here tomorrow by Mussolini's envoy, Fulvio Suvich, foreign undersecretary.

The New Japanese declaration of policy, threatening activities of western powers in China, is expected to occupy the talks between Suvich and British ministers to a lesser degree.

They will discuss all International problems of vital interest to England and Italy, it was announced.

No engagements were made for Suvich this evening, after his arrival from Paris, but tomorrow morning he will begin a series of interviews with Prime Minister MacDonald; Sir John Simon, foreign secretary; and Capt. Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal.

A more aggressive attitude by Italy than Great Britain is expected to be directed toward the Japanese manifesto. Italy's concern over what its responsible leaders have openly described as a Japanese menace to the western world is attributed here to Japanese-Italian friction in Abyssinia as well as Asia.

But Mussolini and Suvich have been plain spoken in criticizing Japan, which was attacked most recently in connection with the introduction of Italy's armaments budget.

England will be inclined to soft-pedal the Japanese problem, it was learned authoritatively.

A new approach to disarmament in an effort to break the existing deadlock caused by France's condemnation of four-power negotiations is the main objective of the Anglo-Italian talks.

Italy's scheme for limitation of armaments at present levels and a defensive rearmament of Germany is now at the forefront of the discussion, due to the apparent hopelessness of British demands for actual disarmament.

Paris Stands Firm On Arms Question

Paris, April 22 (AP).—The hopelessness of further efforts to disarm Europe were indicated today to Fulvio Suvich, Italian undersecretary for foreign affairs, in an hour's talk with Premier Gaston Doumergue.

France's refusal to "legalize" rearmament of Germany or to undertake to restrict her own military strength under such circumstances was reiterated before Suvich proceeded to London for an attempt to find a way out of the deadlock.

Paris is standing firmly by its position and declines to discuss Mussolini's arms limitation scheme or other plans, Doumergue indicated, except at Geneva, where Germany has shown no intention of returning.

Roosevelt Nearnig Test on Inflation

wanted to keep a free hand over his monetary program.

Administration leaders, however, were not as concerned about this situation as they were about the drive for inflation which is gaining momentum in the House.

Speaker Henry T. Rainey, Majority Leader Joseph Byrns and other House leaders discussed the approaching battle during a week-end fishing trip in Virginia. The bloc supporting the McLeod bill, which calls upon the Government to redeem deposits in closed banks, has served notice that it will seek to force a vote on the measure today.

Proponents of the Frazier-Lemke bill, which would authorize the Government to issue greenbacks to refinance farm mortgages, said they would make a new effort during the week to get sufficient signatures to a petition to force the measure out of committee and onto the floor for action.

White House Opposes Both.

President Roosevelt and his fiscal leaders have thrown their full opposition against both of these proposals, declaring them to be highly inflationary and unworkable.

Dissatisfied with the lack of action on his 30-hour work week bill, Chairman William Connery (Democrat), Massachusetts, of the House Labor Committee said last night he and a group of labor leaders would seek a conference with President Roosevelt this week to get his viewpoint on the measure.

In his recent conference with Congressional leaders, President Roosevelt did not include the Connery bill on the list of Administration measures he wants passed. Connery has threatened to petition the Rules Committee to force consideration of his measure unless the group acts voluntarily.

Doubt that the House leaders would be able to throttle the inflationary movement revived current reports that an effort might be made when the House is reorganized after the November elections to replace Rainey and Byrns as Administration chieftains.

"Whips" Needed.

Observers have pointed out that there will be an urgent need for stronger leadership in the House if the present ponderous majority is whittled down by the fall elections. Speaker Rainey is not in sympathy with the President's stand on silver legislation and has repeatedly urged the need of remonetization. Also, he publicly urged the need of legislation to redeem deposits in closed banks after the Chief Executive had stated his emphatic opposition to the McLeod bill.

tal that the heavy industry committee appeals to Congress for prompt relief from the restrictions which are not regulating, but paralyzing capital activity.

The committee report, as made by Chairman Houston, who heads Baldwin Locomotive and Standard Steel Works, said:

"Code Authorities, Code Committees and All Employers in the Durable Goods Industries:

Seek to Aid Government.

"American industry, feeling deeply its responsibility to the 10,000,000 persons still unemployed, is trying to aid the Government in a plan that will restore work by reviving the private spending that has always been the backbone of our economic system, and thus make unnecessary the huge spending of public funds.

"Reemployment, however, is ing blocked by the presence of laws which choke the flow of money and credit and by proposed bills that go even further in that direction. The elimination of these obstacles is so vital to recovery that we are outlining the steps the Government should take in order that a real business recovery shall be achieved.

"Reemployment must be found largely where unemployment now exists—that is, in the production of durable goods which are paid for to a considerable extent by the proceeds of the sale of new securities. Reemployment in these industries is dependent upon a revival of the flow of savings of the people and of available chredit into the securities of private business for the purpose of financing the purchase of durable goods.

"This flow of savings and credit has been blocked by the restrictive provisions of the securities act of 1933, and will be further blocked if the proposed securities exchange bills, S. 2693, H. R. 8720, known as the Fletcher-Rayburn bills, are enacted into law in their present form.

"The Fletcher-Rayburn Bills have been in the hands of the respective committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives for many weeks. Recently they were referred to sub-committees for redrafting. This work has been finished and the new drafts reported back to the full committee. The Senate Committee has reported out its bill and the House Committee is expected to complete its work shortly.

"These bills have been examined carefully by representatives of industry. Specific amendments necessary to meet industry's requirements have been submitted to each member of the Senate and House Committees.

"Amendments to the Securities Act of 1933 have also been prepared to correct the defects of this act, from industry's viewpoint, and to remove the existing restrictions upon the flow of private capital into private business.

"Public attention has been focused by proponents of the Fletcher-Rayburn Bills on the activities of the stock exchanges in opposing this legislation, as if the questions of speculation and trading were the only ones involved in it, thus distracting attention from its effect upon industry itself.

"The representatives of industry have stated frequently that they are in accord with the objectives of President Roosevelt in correcting speculative abuses. Those objectives should and can be realized without further regulation of private business and without throttling the flow of private capital into private business.

Still Halts Flow.

"The Fletcher-Rayburn bills as now worded still contain provisions which would seriously interfere with the operation of private business and would place it under far-reaching regulation by the commission charged with the regulation of the securities exchanges. These bills would further impose such regulations upon every small enterprise throughout the country, which might wish to have its securities traded in through a dealer, to any extent, in any community, no matter how small or how far removed from the great speculative center. In addition these bills would require the periodical reporting of the amount of stock held by each stockholder owning more than 5 to 10 per cent of such stock in any such company. This would discourage men from making large investments in or retaining their present large holdings in such industrial securities.

"Industry has been asked to determine ways and means of creating employment and has been charged with a great responsibility to accomplish this end. It is prepared to accept its full share of this responsibility and to address itself to the solution of this problem if its hands are not tied by restrictive laws.

Grant, who had sprung one spec-

"Industry has stated to the respective committees of Congress its needs with respect to this legislation as follows:

"With respect to the Fletcher-Rayburn bills:

"1. Their scope should be limited to the proper regulation of securities exchanges and to the correction of speculative abuses on such exchanges.

"2. Their scope should not include the regulation of the purchase and sale, through a dollar, of securities which are not registered on a securities exchange. These include the securities of most of the small enterprises throughout the country.

"3. Their scope should not include the regulation of business large and small, or the ownership of their securities.

Law Should Be Reasonable.

"4. Companies issuing securities should be required to furnish only such information as may be reasonably necessary for the protection of investors and should be protected against the disclosure of private information not actually required for that purpose.

"5 Officers, directors and stockholders of all companies should not be subjected to unjustifiable liabilities to civil suits for damages and unusual and excessive criminal punishments.

"With respect to amendments required to the Securities act of 1933:

"1. Companies issuing securities should be relieved from the excessive burden of cost, incident to the accounting and reporting requirements of the act, beyond those reasonably necessary for the information and protection of investors.

"2. Officers, directors and technical advisers of companies issuing securities and the underwriters of and dealers in the same, should be relieved from unusual and excessive liabilities to civil suits and criminal penalties.

"Responsibility for putting industry in a position to function effectively rests directly with the Congress. Industry must be given freedom to create employment through normal channels, or employment must be found outside of industry.

"We urge that each individual give immediate attention to the effect of these matters upon recovery and reemployment and take such action as will insure the registering of his matured opinion in such manner as he may consider most effective.

"Durable Goods Industries Committee—George H. Houston, chairman; James W. Hook, Harry S. Kimball, Franklin R. Hoadley, George P. Torrence, Lewis H. Brown, Fred A. Lorenz, jr., Charles R. Hook, Walter J. Kohler, Steven F. Voorhees."

That a vast outlet exists for private capital is the main point made by the National Industrial Conference Board which made public the following statement:

Accumulated Demand Heavy.

"An accumulated demand for new investment capital totaling $4,500,000,000 for producing and operating facilities has piled up in the last three years a sa result of the virtual cessation of private financing. In the same period, Federal financing has siphoned $4,500,000,000 from the capital market.

"Capital borrowed by the Federal Government in recent years and directed into nonproductive channels, has been barely equal to the total that might have been absorbed in extending the Nation's producing and operating facilities alone.

"From the all-time peak of $9,400,000,000 in 1929, the total of new capital and refunding issues for domestic corporations floated in the American investment market dropped to $380,000,000 in 1933. Of the 1933 total, only $161,000,000 went into new capital issues, the balance being absorbed by refundings. New capital invested in a single month in any of the years from 1924 to 1929 was in excess of the value of new issues floated during the entire 12 months of 1933.

"Moreover, of the $161,000,000 of new capital issues in 1933, $83,000,000 was taken by the liquor and allied industries, revived by the repeal of prohibition. Thus, less than $80,000,000 was available for the extension of industrial and commercial enterprise in all other fields of activity.

Situation Foreshadowed.

"The critical situation in the capital market in 1933 was foreshadowed by the behavior of refundings of maturing debt early in 1932, when for the first time on record, the volume of refundings of matured indebtedness was in excess of the volume of new debt contracted. In April, 1932, new money raised by flotation of stocks and bonds aggregated $15,070,000, while borrowings for refunding purposes reached a total of $33,124,000. This condition reasserted itself in five of the eight subsequent months of 1932 and in six months of 1933.

"In 1932 new capital borrowed for domestic corporate financing totaled $325,400,000, and the total borrowed for refunding operations amounted to $318,500,000. In 1933 new capital amounted to $160,600,000, while refundings totaled $219,300,000. Never in previous years had borrowings for refunding exceeded borrowings for the extension of operations. This development indicates a perilously low state of vitality in the economic and financial organism.

"The conference board points that a revival of business activity, if coupled with the prospect of profits, should result in a large increase in the volume of security offerings to provide for the usual expansion of business in normal times and to supply in part the deficiency in capital investment in plant and facilities that has marked the last three years. The conference board estimates that an aggregate investment in the three years, 1931- 1933, of $6,000,000 in the country's producing and operating facilities would have been normal. As a total of only $1,500,000,000 of new capital was actually raised for this purpose, a net deficit of $4,500,000,000 may be regarded as the accumulated backlog."

to recognize traditional differentials. On the other hand, no region has any right, by depressing its labor, wages and hours, to invade with its cheaper product an area of higher wages and hours and thus to impose its lower standards on an area of high standards.

Avoids "Disruptive Changes."

"While it is the view of the Administration that living standards have already improved and will continue to improve in the South, as they already have improved in all other areas, it is not our intention to produce any sudden or disruptive change in an established economic relationship."

Retreat from the previous wage increase order came after two days of conferences of miners and operators with General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA Administrator. The agreement was reached late Saturday and operators left for their for their homes expressing the conviction that labor difficulties had been ended.

In all the fields affected, except the Fairmont field, the basic wage rate was revised downward. In the Fairmont district, changes were made in the rates for loading and cutting, with a $5 basic rate remaining unchanged.

In connection with the wage changes, Johnson also ordered the creation of a specia research unit of NRA to study adjustments in the price structure within the soft industry. The unit will be organized as a part of the NRA research and planning division and it will have authority to make recommendations concerning readjustment of price structure.

Changes ordered as compared with wages in effect from October to March 31 and wages the March 31 order sought to put into effect follow:

Ala. & Ga.	$3.80	$3.40	$4.60
So'western States	4.35	3.75	4.60
So'eastern Tenn.	4.24	3.84	4.44

The southwestern region includes Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

Meanwhile, the Associated Press reported that although peace prevailed throughout the Alabama coal fields, additional troops were being mobilized pending restoration of noraml conditions under the new NRA order. A troop of dismounted cavalry was being mobilized at Birmingham and a company of infantry at Guntersville.

The same report told of a rumor that ore miners, members of the International Union of Mine, Smelter and Mill Workers, were threatening to walk out. It was reported that several manufacturing plants probably would close for lack of coal unless mines resumed operations.

America Ranks First In Use of Eyeglasses

Kansas City, Mo. (U.P.).—America has the best lighted homes and offices in the world, but paradoxically, has the greatest number of eyeglass users, according to Dr. Anton Elschnig, head of the eye clinic at the University of Prague. It does not follow, however, says Dr. Elschnig, that sight of Europeans is any better than that of Americans.

"For one thing, many women wear glasses in this country while they don't in Europe," he said. "European women probably need glasses but I guess they are too proud to wear them."

Boss Is Changed Yearly But Job Remains Same

Phoenix, Ariz. (U.P.).—Wayland E. Brown, local agent at the Union Station here, has the distinction of being one of the few men in the country that changes employers every New Year's Day but continues with the same duties.

Back in 1923 the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroads started operation into the Union Station here. They agreed each would have a representative head at the station on alternate years. Brown was appointed by the Santa Fe for the first year. Since that time neither road has elected to change the arrangement.

He is being paid this year by the Santa Fe, while his checks for 1933 came from the Southern Pacific.

Doctor Saved from Drowning After Singing at Blossom Fete

Commissioners' Aid Drags Warsaw, 76, Into Boat After Basin Plunge.

Dr. Alfredo Warsaw, 76, well known here as a singer and physician, was saved from drowning by Ira E. Keck, aid to the Board of Commissioners, and former police detective sergeant, during the Cherry Blossom Festival regatta in the Tidal Basin Saturday afternoon, it was revealed yesterday.

Dr. Warsaw has just finished singing "Face Without a Smile" from the judges' island in the center of the basin and was boarding a speedboat to return to shore when he slipped and fell backwards. Although he can swim, Dr. Warsaw said that he lost control of his senses during the backward plunge.

Mr. Keck leaned over the boat and seized Dr. Warsaw when he rose to the surface. The physician slipped out of his clasp, however, and went under for the second time. Keck then planted his feet firmly against the sides of the boat and grabbed the physician when he rose again. He pulled Dr. Warsaw, who weighs 176 pounds, into the boat.

Dr. Warsaw was wrapped in blankets and rushed to shore. Save for slight deafness he appeared none the worse yesterday for the experience. He declared that he owed his life to Mr. Keck.

Japan Leaps Into Breach

Tokyo Issues "Hands-Off-Asia" Ultimatum as U. S. and Russia Quarrel Over Debts and Trade; Deadlock Gives Edge to Nipponese.

By Kendall Foss.

Deadlock with Soviet Russia over debt settlement spells new disputes with Japan over Far Eastern questions, this country is finding out.

As observers here view the matter, no sooner had a rift appeared between Washington and Moscow over the old problem of debts before trade or trade before debts than Tokyo spoke up, telling the world she and she alone would be responsible henceforth for the maintenance of peace in the Orient.

The sequence of events, as reconstructed by American exhibits, is this: Tokyo has been very mild since American recognition of the Soviet Union loomed last autumn. She recognized at once that anything remotely savoring of a Soviet-American solidarity limited her to the most cautious kind of policy. Although careful to deny she saw anything sinister in the rapprochement, she was equally careful not to provoke a showdown.

Yet only a few days had elapsed, after an apparently irreconcilable difference in viewpoint developed between Moscow and Washington, before Tokyo reembarked on what seems only a temporarily interrupted policy of Asiatic expansion.

U. S. in Tight Spot.

The pronouncements issued from Tokyo last week call for one of two things: Energetic protest backed up by a convincing display of readiness to make those protests stick or a retreat from Oriental affairs which can, under the circumstances, hardly fail to be permanent. Neither prospect is attractive.

Amplifying her first blast, which boiled down to a "white hands off Asia" ultimatum, Japan explained the statement was but a continuation of the policy undertaken in 1931 with the attack on Mukden and the beginning of the Manchurian adventure. It is, however, more than that. It is a resumption of a policy of aggressive expansion on to the mainland of Asia which began in 1895 and has remained the visible goal of Japanese foreign policy ever since.

If proof were necessary that Soviet-American collaboration is the thing Japan fears most, the speed with which Japan emerged from her winter coma upon receipt of heartening information appears to supply it.

Five months have elapsed since President Roosevelt and Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff exchanged letters late one night and thus bridged a chasm that existed for 16 years.

Debt Issue Dodged.

Litvinoff arrived hoping to obtain recognition without committing his country to payment of old debts in advance. Roosevelt wanted recognition of repudiated prerevolutionary debts to precede the establishment of diplomatic relations. They compromised by making the two things simultaneous.

The discussion of outstanding claims, governmental and private, had progressed to a point where an early settlement was confidently expected, it was announced at the time. Litvinoff went home; Ambassador Bullitt soon went to Moscow. It is understood the complex job of working out a debt settlement is proceeding in Moscow. But it evidently is not going very fast.

A fortnight ago the passage of the Johnson bill penalizing those who dealt in the obligations of governments in default to this Government seemed to point at Soviet Russia among others. Its passage in the House was only possible, in the opinion of one Representative, because the Export-Import Bank for trade with the Soviet Union had passed a resolution declaring it would not promote trade until a debt settlement satisfactory to the Prseident had been reached. This is thought to have reassured a hesitant House, afraid Moscow was to be particulraly favored.

Moscow Snaps Back.

eRaction from Moscow was immediate. Attempts to put pressure upon the Soviet Union by holding up trade would net nothing but disappointment, it was semiofficially stated. The Soviet Union could and would place its orders elsewhere, it was intimated, apparently in the hope the withdrawal of enticing bait would cause Washington to step down.

But Washington answered with the unofficial intimation it could survive nicely, thank you, without Soviet orders and if Moscow did not value American trade enough to wind up the matter of its predecessors' debts—already agreed to in principle—then trade would not start.

Right after this veiled exchange of what probably only amounts to expressions of disinterest associated with the best horse-trading technique, Japan picked up the threads again and went on with her program.

If the mutual assertions of ability to get on without the other recently heard both here and in Moscow are but stages in the negotiations, but jockeyings for position, then Japan perhaps will find she has miscalcuated. If, on the other hand, a genuine deadlock is developing, Japan probably will be the first to demonstrate to both the unwisdom of their course. This is the fear of close followers outside the Administration.

U. S. Goods Best Fitted.

It has long been recognized in Moscow that American machines are better adapted to Rusian conditions than similar equipment made in England and on the continent. American goods is more nearly foolproof, does not require highly skilled operators, is designed for large-scale work, and is usually cheaper both to buy and to operate. This is the contention of many engineers who have worked in the Soviet Union and likewise is often admitted by Soviet engineers interested in rapid exploitation of Soviet resources and cheap production of consumption goods.

Granted many estimates of the trade which might be developed between the world's greatest and the world's largest political units have been too high, the soberest critics concede a goodly business could be done. But it evidently can not even be launched unless steps are taken on both sides of the board to avert deadlock.

House Leaders Fish and Plan

Democrats, on Outing at Hoover's Old Camp Map Strategy.

Luray, Va., April 22 (U.P.).—In the Rapidan camp where former President Hoover and Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain sat on a log and drafted naval disarmament plans, Democratic House leaders today fished and discussed policies totally opposed to the Hoover point of view.

A Democratic delegation headed by Speaker Henry T. Rainey and Majority Leader Joseph Byrns invaded the camp yesterday as the guests of Gov. George Peery of Virginia. They planned to return to Washington before noon tomorrow.

The mountain camp developed by Mr. Hoover now belongs to the State of Virginia.

Although Mr. Rainey in adjourning the House Saturday after a 30-minute session said they were only "going fishing," there was every indication he conferred over the week-end with Byrns on the disposal of inflationary legislation facing a showdown in the House this week.

Delegations supporting the inflationary proposals kept Mr. Rainey so busy Thursday and Friday that he was able to spend only a short time in the chamber and was unable to dispose of other legislative duties. The leaders are expected to return to the Capital with a definite plan of action.

Science Show Opening Today To Study Rays

Savants From All Parts of World to Reveal New Secrets.

Eyes of the scientific world are upon Washington today as leading minds in the United States and abroad gather here for a week-long series of meetings, bringing news of their latest discoveries.

It is the Capital's annual scientific show, traditionally history-making. It will open with the first meeting today of a three-day session of the National Academy of Science. Meetings of the American Geophysical Union, the American Physical Society, the Institute of Radio Engineers and the American Meteorological Society will follow.

Newest developments in studies concerning the nature and source of cosmic rays, production of anesthesia by distilled water, old age, observation of the solar corona without an eclipse, South Carolina meteorite scars and the relation of intensity and frequency to the loudness and pitch of musical tones, are included on the National Academy program.

Sir Arthur to Speak.

Among the most noteworthy of the scientific men to come here for the academy sessions is Sir Arthur Edington, English astronomer and relatively philospher. As guest speaker at tomorrow morning's session he will detail the unification of relativity and quantum theories.

Hypotheses developed after long study of the factors involved in the appearance of new life forms and the disappearance of the old, will be presented by Dr. Henry Fairchild Osborn, veteran American student of evolution. Some of the potentialities in extreme old age in man will be considered by Dr. Francis D. Benedict, of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, and Dr. Simon Flexner of the Rockefeller Institute, will describe newly found sources and modes of infantile paralysis infection.

Dr. Arthur H. Compton, director of a two-year survey to determine the nature and origin of cosmic rays; Dr. Robert A. Millikan and others who were associated with him, will discuss some of the results of their work.

Weather to Be Analyzed.

Of nearly equal interest to scientists will be the meetings of the Geophysical Union devoted to the earth sciences. Experts from the U. S. Weather Bureau will take a prominent part in discussions of some of the complications of weather forecasting, and some of the final results of the international polar year expeditions will be made known.

All sessions of the scientific bodies will be concerned with fundamental science, as distinguished from applied. A statement explaining their purpose, issued by President John C. Merriam, of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, said:

"Because of its very nature, research is concerned with exploration of unknown fields. Where studies are set up for the purpose of carrying knowledge forward along lines already laid down, it may be possible to make approximate prediction. But if the situation were fully known, the work would be merely verification and not fundamental research.

"The paths are rarely well defined. * * * Not infrequently there appears to be a complete separation from everything having to do with practical living, but that does not diminish the ultimate value of results."

DePriest to Act In Cafe Fight

Will Press Opposition to Colored Patrons' Ban Today.

Prepared to resort to a filibuster if necessary, Representative Oscar DePriest (Republican), Illinois, yesterday announced he is erady to continue his fight today on the floor of Congress against the exclusion of colored patrons from the House restaurant.

De Priest announced his intention at the John Wesley Church, where he opened the annual membership drive of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

He said he will rise on the floor today and ask Speaker Rainey the parliamentary question as to his right to bring before the House of Representatives his petition concerning authority of Representative Lindsay C. Warren (Democrat), North Carolina, to order the exclusion of colored people from the restaurant.

William Edwin Taylor advocated formation of a lobby here to watch all legislation affecting colored people. The membership appeal was made by W. H. C. Brown, conservator of the Industrial Savings Bank. Other speakers included the Rev. W. O. Carrington, and George E. Cohron, director of the membership drive.

24-Year-Old Mule Rides to Hounds

London (U.P.).—Warrior is a 23-year-old war-horse. He still carries his master, Lord Mottistone, gallantly to hounds. Lord Mottistone thought this constituted a record.

But the record has been challenged by a lowly mule. Goffe Cave, its owner, says that he still rides to hounds astride a 24-year-old mule that came back from France in 1918. He also rides it regularly around his farm.

Three-Way Airplane Constructed in Russia

Leningrad (U.P.).—A three-way airplane, designed to land on water, land or snow, has been completed by the Scientific Aviation Research Institute here. A seven-seater, is is built entirely of wood. The plane will serve the air lines of the Leningrad district.

downtown area was described as "the most unusual in years" by police officials.

The First Precinct assigned more than 50 men to direct traffic. All policemen listed as "off duty" were pressed into service.

The entire Traffic Bureau force, detailed on foot and motorcycle, was on duty and special men were assigned to handle accident reports.

Out-of-town motorists, augmented by an unusual turn out of Washingtonians, swelled the total of Sunday riders to well beyond 100,000 vehicles, it was estimated.

Telegraph companies also reported that despite the week-end lull due to adjournment of Congress, an increase of 25 per cent over the normal number of messages was handled.

Two Policemen Slain in Fight

Roadhouse Row After Drinking Bout Ends Fatally for Chief.

Chicago, April 22 (A.P.).—In a blaze of gunfire which ended a night of revelry in a suburban Broadview tavern early today, Police Chief Edward Murray of Berkeley Village and Patrolman John Ashbacker of Broadview, were slain.

Two brothers of Murray, James and Thomas, who were wounded, and a dozen other witnesses were held by police.

Stories of the shooting varied. Roy Coburn, who with his brother, Mayor Forrest Coburn of Broadview owns the tavern, the Crazy Quilt, told police the gunfight started when Ashbacker, stationed at the door of the tavern because of recent holdups, tried to eject the Murray brothers because they were too noisy.

James Murray named Coburn as the man who killed his brother, Edward.

Thomas Murray asserted he and his brothers were attacked and that Edward drew his pistol in self defense, whereupon Ashbacker began shooting.

Joan to Remain Single, She Says

Miss Crawford Free May 13; Denies Intention to Wed Franchot Tone.

Hollywood, April 22 (A.P.).—Joan Crawford gets her final decree of divorce from Douglas Fairbanks, jr., May 13, but she is not going to marry that young man from Cornell, Franchot Tone, she said.

The dancing daughter of the screen thinks marriage for an actress is "impossible." She says she will not marry Franchot, her constant companion, so long as she is in motion pictures, and she has no thought of giving up her career.

The supposed date of the wedding of Joan and Franchot had been forecast as May 14. Tone admits he has proposed to Joan.

"An actress should never marry; I am convinced of that," Joan said. "It is better to say now that I shall not marry, and cause a small hurt, than to say yes and cause a great hurt later on. It is simply the oft-told tale that career and marriage do not mix."

Joan said she believes her former husband will marry Gertrude Lawrence, the English actress to whom he has been paying court in London.

Thedy Gets Interior Post.

Montevideo, Uruguay, April 22 (A.P.).—Eugenio Martinez Thedy was appointed minister of the interior today in Uruguay's new constitutional regime which gives the president dictatorial powers.

Driver Nabbed Twice at Same Spot in An Hour

"Hey, where's the fire? Pull over to the curb."

The traffic policeman's favorite greeting—and Conrad Christel, 28, an attorney of the 1700 block of Q street northwest, probably will never forget it.

Yesterday his automobile was stopped twice within an hour, on the same street, at the same place, by the same policeman.

Shortly after 6 a. m. Christel's machine was "waved down" on upper Connecticut avenue northwest, by Policeman R. V. Sinclair, "champion arrester" of the traffic squad. The charge—"40 miles on hour."

Less than a half hour later, Christel approaching the same spot, glanced into the mirror. Behind him was Sinclair. A second trip was made to headquarters. The charge—"55 miles per hour."

Christel will be in Traffic Court this morning.

port all of the contributions, and it is conceded one can not be convicted without the other.

Another hour of cross-examination of the bishop, who already had two trying days on the stand, will precede the testimony of Miss Burroughs. The case may not go to the jury before Wednesday.

In an attempt to show Miss Burroughs had knowledge of additional "Jameson money" before she made her final report on February 11, 1929, the prosecution has introduced a letter, around which much of the cross-examination of the bishop's codefendant is exepcted to revolve.

On January 5, 1929, Cannon dictated a letter to E. C. Jameson, president of the Globe & Rutgers Fire Insurance Co., thanking him for his "generous support," without which "the success of the campaign might not have been possible." A symbol in the lower left-hand corner of the letter indicated it had been dictated to one "AB," who, the state contends, was none other than Miss Burroughs.

The defense has maintained that even if Miss Burroughs wrote the letter of January 5 at the bishop's dictation it would not have provided her with definite knowledge of the extent of Jameson's contributions.

Faces Check Quiz.

Cross-examination of Miss Burroughs also will delve into the much-discussed switching of checks with Canon on February 11, 1929, declared by the defense to have been a simple bookkeeping transaction and described by Prosecuter John J. Wilson as "common, garden variety check kiting."

The bishop has admitted giving Miss Burroughs checks for more than $18,000 at a time when his balance was only about $560. In return, she deposited to his account checks aggregating $18,000, although her balance consisted of an overdraft of $81 or so.

The Government will attempt to show that this and other financial transactions indicate conspiracy between the defendants to cover up the use of "Jameson money."

One or two rebuttal witnesses may be put on late today or tomorrow by the Government. Former Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, was to have been called, but retraction by the bishop of earlier testimony regarding Frelinghuysen's contributions made this unnecessary.

A number of admissions correcting his previous testimony were drawn from Cannon by the prosecution Saturday, and the defense hopes to play its trump card today with Miss Burroughs' appearance and denial of the conspiracy charge.

In an address before the Roanoke Real Estate Board, Talley said a sharp improvement in rentals already had occurred throughout the State.

U. S. Speeding Plans to Form Relief Towns

take control only in cases where it finances the communities. States will be given full leeway to operate their own projects.

The Texas project was worked out by the Texas Relief Administration and placed into operation last Christmas when 100 families were moved from Houston. Each of these families was provided with 3 acres of land and a house costing $1,800. The settlement is in two units a short distance apart. The project is expected to amortize itself in 15 years.

"We are not trying to do all of the thinking for these unfortunate people," Westbrook said. "We are trying to give them an opportunity. They'll accomplish more for themselves than we could in the long run. I think that we who plan, often plan too much. We are trying to make it as simple as possible.

"We are feeling our way at the present time. We are giving the States full leeway to develop procedure. People who are already on land should not be on relief rolls we feel and we are helping them get off relief. Instead of direct relief we would rather provide facilities to aid them in making a living.

Loans for Equipment.

"Sometimes the man needs only a mule, sometimes a cow, sometimes chickens or other farm equipment.

"The Farm Credit Administration will advance money for equipment. But some of these people haven't enough assets to get a loan. We are providing the cushion to get him into position to become a contributing citizen instead of a ward.

"Thousands of acres are being turned over to us for the program. On this land we hope to settle stranded families from the cities. Many such on relief rolls will remain there so long as their state of mind is unchanged.

"We are helping tenant farmers who haven't enough equipment to make use of available land. We assist them in every possible way, but with the understanding they will pay for equipment lent them. We sometimes lend a cow or other necessary live stock. The title remains in the Government for both the original animal and its offspring.

Industrial Plans.

"We figure a good share cropper may be turned into a good tenant and later into a landowner. A few families have been moved, but our object is to provide the opportunity and let the person being helped get to the opportunity on his own resourcefulness."

No effort is being made to induce industry to move into any of the communities.

"We believe," Westbrook said, "that selecting locations susceptible to industrial development is better than trying to induce industry to come. Get the people there and industry will follow."

The Emergency Relief Administration had been assisting cooperatives, with the aid of the Interior Department's subsistence homestead division, since Harry L. Hopkins became administrator.

Administration Works For Home Economics

Des Moines, Iowa (U.P.).—The uppermost objective of the present Administration in Washington is social pioneering, according to Miss Grace Frysinger, senior home economist in the United States Department of Agriculture.

Miss Frysinger addressed a group of Iowa State College and University of Iowa faculty women. She said that in all parts of the Administration home-economics women were being recognized and called on to help in this social engineering.

"We must have faith to accept difficulties," she said, "knowing that good is coming out of this program even though mistakes may be made."

Meeting Called To Plan Better Negro Schools

National Conference Here May 9 to 12 to Map Movement.

In an effort to enable educational agencies to work out a plan of closer cooperation for the improvement of education of Negroes, a National conference will be held in Washington, May 9 to 12. Simultaneously with announcement of the meeting, educational leaders were named heads of 14 committees in the country-wide campaign yesterday by George F. Zook, United States Commissioner of Education.

Next month's meeting represents an attempt to crystallize plans formulated two years ago when the United States Department of Education. Preliminary work of this conference will be performed by the committees, whose function is to study the financial support of education and certain problems in the education of Negroes.

"The gap existing between the Negro youth," authorities said," and the trained Negro adult, who is expected to participate effectively in the work-a-day world, is greater than that existing between the white youth and the trained white adult. If anything, the gap is widening for the reason that educational facilities are less adequate for the Negro.

"In order, therefore, that the Negro may keep abreast of our progress, and may not become a burden to the Nation, it is important that the fundamental and special problems of his education be attacked on a broad front."

Various types of education, from elementary to university, public and private, will be considered. The immediate aim of the conference is to study problems peculiar to the Negro and each committee, after treating general problems to provide a backround, will emphasize special phases.

The purpose of the first six committees is to study education in its relationship to life activities. Committees No. 7 to No. 11 consider both general and special methods by which education may contribute to knowledge needed in each activity treated by the first six groups. The remaining three committees will study functions of the larger groups.

14 Committees Named.

The committees and respective officers follow:

Navajo Upholds Code; Refuses to Blame Wife

Gallup, N. M. (U.P.).—Because he refused to break the Navajo code and charge his wife with infidelity, Joe Sandoval, 25-year-old reservation Navajo, is held in county jail here facing charge of manslaughter and his pretty young squaw is held as an accomplice.

Disdaining the plea that he dealt injuries to Felipe Sam, Navajo, which resulted in his death, because Sam had paid too much attention to Sandoval's wife, Joe Sandoval at his preliminary hearing stoically pleaded guilty and quietly listened to evidence in direct contrast to the findings of an earlier investigation.

Before the hearing it was intimated by the assistant district attorney that possibly no charges would be preferred if Sandoval's plea coincided with original findings concerning the infidelity of his wife.

Rail Pay Row Break Waited By Both Sides

Brotherhoods, Managers Want Other to Force Act Invocation.

(Associated Press.)

Railroad labor and managers last night maneuvered behind the scenes to see which side would make the first move to invoke the Federal railroad labor act to settle their wage dispute.

This jockeying for position was the result of the definite collapse of President Roosevelt's effort to bring accord through mediation efforts by the railroad coordinator, Joseph B. Eastman.

The coordinator withdrew Saturday when the workers flatly refused to agree to the President's suggestion that the existing 10 per cent cut be extended six months and the managers declined to make further concessions.

While the collapse of Eastman's peace efforts brought the dispute a step nearer possible strike action, those interested insisted that several paths to peace lay ahead before that point was reached.

The first opportunity exists in the board of mediation and conciliation. Either party may invoke its services.

Eastman was confident the dispute would be settled before the strike stage was reached, either through the mediation board or through the offices of a fact-finding commission set up by President Roosevelt.

He was certain, on the other hand, that his own efforts to bring accord, under the instructions of the President, were in vain. "There seems," he said, "nothing I can do through mediation."

While the procedure beyond the point of mediation board action was somewhat uncertain in the minds of those involved, it was understood that the board had the power to issue a certificate of emergency to President Roosevelt under which he could name a specal board of arbitration.

Railroad Refunds Price Of 63-Year-old Ticket

Lincoln, Cal. (U.P.).—Frank Elder believed railroad tickets should be good until used, so he decided to turn in the ticket he bought 63 years ago and get a refund of the fare he paid to travel from Rocklin to Lincoln.

The ticket, sold by an agent of the Central Pacific in 1870, was promptly redeemed by the Southern Pacific Co., which absorbed the former railroad many years ago. Elder said the ticket was unused because while he was waiting for a train one of his friends drove by with a horse and buggy and carried him to his destination.

Boy, 7, Tells Police Of Father's Murder

Istanbul (U.P.). — Seven-year-old Mehmed came to the police with a tale of trouble at home.

His mother, aided by two men, set about his father, and one of her assistants cleft open the husband's head with a hatchet, said Mehmed. When this commenced, the child was sitting in a corner, peeling an apple with a knife. Then, he told the police, his mother took the knife from him and cut off his father's nose and ears. Following this, the trio buried the body in a dunghill.

Trade Indices Found Pointing To High Levels

Cheerful Background Still Persists; Freight and Steel Advance.

New York, April 22.—In its weekly review of business and financial conditions the Wall Street Journal says the business horizon is not devoid of clouds, but the major indices continue to afford a fairly cheerful background for the market. Railroad traffic, in the latest week, scored a better than seasonal rise over the previous week; utility output figures gained, and operations in the steel industry are still rising.

Some concern is being felt about consumer goods buying, and grocery sales for March and sales by New York department stores in the first 12 days of April were not encouraging. There has been a let down in some of the lighter industries, like the rayon industry and in cotton goods. Motor production, on the other hand, is holding up well, and orders still are in good volume.

Steel operations pushed ahead to the highest levels since August, 1933, and were averaging 50.3 per cent of capacity, against 47.4 per cent. With a strong backlog of unfilled orders on the books, steel men were looking forward to a good rate of operations through most of the present quarter.

Some steel plants reported bookings in the first half of April had run 25 per cent and more over the like period of March, and the indications were that bookings for the entire month would be well above the total for the month of March. Much of the tonnage placed, of course, was for the purpose of seeking protection against the higher prices which went into effect the second week of April.

Rise of French Francs to Gold Export Point Offers a Potential Test of Whether We Are Willing to Defend the Dollar.

By Ralph West Robey.

On Saturday, for the first time since the dollar was devalued, a major foreign currency—French francs—rose to a sufficient premium to make it profitable to ship gold out of this country. Ordinarily such a development would be of no particular interest and of little importance. In fact it is customary for exchange rates to swing during the course of a year from the gold import to the gold export points simply as a result of seasonal variations in the volume of international trade. At present, however, having a currency reach the gold export point against the dollar is of major significance and the attitude the government takes toward it will be of marked influence upon the outlook for business.

The reason that this is the case is simple, although if one is not accustomed to foreign exchange terminology it may appear on the surface as most complicated. To understand it one needs to remember that between every two currencies there is a par of exchange—a rate that exactly reflects the relative gold content of the two monetary units. In the case of French francs this par, since the devaluation of the dollar, is 6.6335 cents. In other words, if one shipped gold dollars from here to France and had them melted down and coined into francs he would receive one franc for each 6.63 cents. Conversely, if gold francs were shipped to the United States and recoined into dollars one would get 6.63 cents for each franc.

Gold Export Point Is Par Plus All Expenses.

Now, in practice, one can not afford to make, say, such shipments from the United States to France if he can get francs in the foreign exchange market at par. This is because of the cooperage, freightage and insurance involved, to say nothing of the loss of interest on the money during the period of shipment. For francs this amounts to roughly seven-hundredths of a cent.

So long, therefore, as one can buy francs in the market for less than par (6.6335) plus the cost of shipment (0.07), or 6.7 cents, it does not pay to ship gold. If the rate goes above this price it is cheaper to convert dollars into gold and ship the metal to France than it is to buy francs in the foreign exchange market.

The price at which such shipment becomes profitable is the gold export point. The exact figure varies somewhat because of the charges, but in the case of francs at present, granting the shipment is on a fast boat so the loss of interest is held down, it is about 6.6975. The import point—which is the export point—for a Frenchman—is about 6.57.

On Saturday, as stated above, francs reached the export price for the first time since we cut the dollar to 59.06 cents. For the first time, accordingly, it became profitable to ship gold out of this country and for the first time the Treasury was faced with a possible demand to convert dollars into gold for the purpose of export.

Will Show What Our 59-Cent Dollar Is.

Here then, is a possible test of just what our 59.06-cent dollar amounts to. If the rate continues at this level, it is certain that there will be a request for a license to export gold. Upon the answer to this request rests the issue of whether we really established a value for our currency that we are willing to defend, or whether it was a mere temporary stopping point on the road of further devaluation.

According to the press, the Secretary of the Treasury intends to grant all such licenses requested. If he does it means that the dollar will hold at the 59-cent level. If he refuses to permit any actual export of the metal, there immediately will be a renewed capital flight from this country and the dollar will shrink to still lower levels in the world markets.

Should such a flight take place it would mean more deflation for us. Further, it would mean that we return to a state of currency confusion and uncertainty. Once again it would be impossible to know what to expect. Investors, accordingly, would refuse to buy new, long-term obligations and business men would refuse to make long term commitments.

For the welfare of the Nation, therefore, is it is imperative that gold be permitted to leave the country—and leave it in any volume that the foreign exchange market demands. Otherwise all of the good work of the last three months in removing doubt as to the future will be wasted and we again will be back where even the United States Government is unable to borrow on other than short-term notes.

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker
(Trade-mark Applied For)

To Connecticut.

Some States are famed for mines or oil
Or for their bumper crops,
And some for lakes, for ranches, trees
Or snow-capped mountain tops,
But here's a State whose fame is great
As history well shows;
Who played her part right from the start
And record brightly glows.
She's famed for valleys—Berkshire Hills;
For good roads running through,
For mills, for shops, tobacco crops.
And Yale — the world-famed "Blue,"
So well may native sons take pride—
(If we were one we'd strut)—
For there is reason to be proud
Of old Connecticut.

THIS date is one of the most important in Connecticut history. On April 22, 1662, the charter of Connecticut was granted the colony by Charles II and validated the following month. It is now the State's most precious relic.

The charter was issued in duplicate. One was accidentally mutilated about 1817 to form the lining of a lady's bonnet. About two-thirds of the second of the two parchment sheets upon which it was written remains. This fragment, together with the small portions of the green wax seal from one of the charters, are now in the custody of the Connecticut Historical Society at Hartford. The other charter, written on three sheets of parchment and lacking only the seal, is preserved in the State Library and Supreme Court Building at Hartford.

Connecticut, with a population of 1,630,000, is a manufacturing State. Its products are builders' hardware, typewriters, locks, watches, clocks and rubber goods and tobacco.

Hartford, the capital, is a beautiful city on the Connecticut River, with a population of 167,900. This is a great insurance center. The rose gardens at Elizabeth City are well known.

New Haven, the next largest city, known for its beautiful trees, has a population of 162,700. Yale University is located here.

Many quaint old towns nestle along Long Island Sound shores, which provide excellent bathing beaches for beautiful homes and summer resorts.

Bridgeport, New Britain and Waterbury are other manufacturing cities through which one passes through Naugatuck Valley to the Berkshire Hills.

Litchfield County, in the Berkshire foothills, is noted for its scenery. To the southwest lies Bantam Lake, largest in the State. In the eastern party of the county are the manufacturing cities of Winsted and Torrington. In the latter are the extensive mills of the American Brass Co. Thomaston is famous for its watches and clocks. In nearby Terryville lived Eli Terry, who invented the first clocks with wooden works. Salisbury was an early iron works center, and it was here the huge iron cable was made which was stretched across the Hudson River in Revolutionary days to prevent Gen. Howe's fleet from reaching West Point.

The gem of towns is Litchfield, called "the most beautiful town in the United States." Many of the houses were built between 1750 and 1800 and are still in perfect condition, some owned by descendants of their original builders.

The Oliver Wolcott house was built in 1753. It was in the orchard back of this house where the leaden statue of King George III, pulled from its pedestal on Bowling Green, New York City, was melted and poured into bullets by the patriotic young townspeople. Sheldon's Tavern, as it was called in Revolutionary days, shows the beautiful architecture of one of North street's houses dated 1760. Here Washington stayed on one of his visits to Litchfield. Harriet Beecher Stowe and Henry Ward Beecher were born here.

Besides its great natural beauty, Litchfield is the home of the first law school in America. The house was built in 1773 by Tapping Reeve, of Princeton College. Here he brought his bride, Sally Burr, sister of Aaron Burr, and began the practice of law, having several students. By 1784 the number had so increased that Reeve put up a one-story building on the lawn. Students entered from all parts of the Nation, a large number coming from the South. Among these were John C. Calhoun and John M. Clayton, both of whom became Secretary of State.

An outstanding woman executive in the Government is Miss Katherine C. Blackburn, of Haddam, director of Press Intelligence. Miss Blackburn entered the service a year ago as special assistant to the Assistant Secretary of State. She attended the London Economic conference.

Weakness of Wheat Fails to Discourage Traders; Franc Watched.

New York, April 22 (AP).—Conflicting trends in security and commodity markets injected considerable confusion into financial affairs this week.

Stocks and bonds were able to push moderately higher, many bonds recording new highs since 1931, in the face of a wide break in grain prices—a surprising performance in view of the usual close correlation between intermediate swings in the wheat and share markets.

The refusal of the security markets to be seriously disturbed by the weakness in wheat was evidently predicated upon the theory that the position of wheat had been exceptional, that it had been vulnerable in view of its wide premium over the world market and the heavy long interest in the May delivery.

Inflation Talk Renewed.

Considerable inflation sentiment was stirred up in the stock market as a result of the reaction in staples, but it was discredited in Washington, where administration quarters made it clear that no new monetary tinkering was contemplated, despite the agitation for mandatory silver legislation.

The talk of possible dollar inflation, however, together with lessened fears for the gold standard in France, brought enough selling of dollars and buying of francs to drive the dollar down to a discount in terms of the European gold currencies for the first time since the dollar's international value was fixed at 15 5-21 grains of gold last January 31.

In fact, after the close of the European markets on Saturday the French franc rose to a level in New York which would make it profitable to buy gold from the Treasury and sell it to the Bank of France. The situation was regarded in Wall Street as perhaps largely technical, however, inasmuch as the gold point was not reached by the franc until Paris dealings had closed.

Views on Franc.

Doubt was expressed as to the liklihood of continuance of a franc rate at a level that would draw gold from New York, reversing the recent movement. In want of any further information on the subject since the dollar was put on an international bullion basis, it was assumed that the Treasury would sell gold for export in exchange transactions in the same manner that it had purchased imported gold.

The Stock Market was not only called upon to withstand the unsettling effects of the break in wheat, but also experienced a sharp reaction in Canadian gold stocks, without a tremor elsewhere, as the Dominion announced a 10 per cent tax on newly mined gold. Major groups crept higher most of the week. The standard price index of 90 representative issues rose 1.3 points to finish at 88.5, touching the best level since late February.

The bond market failed to duplicate the pronounced strength of the previous week but still moved higher, the index of 60 corporate issues registering a net gain of .7 of one point, which carried it to 88.1, the best level since September 18, 1931. U. S. Government issues wavered a little after their recent advance.

Steel Operation Reaches Peak Since Summer

Tin Prices Rise Slightly as Zinc Falls $1 Per Ton; Lead Holds Steady.

New York, April 22 (AP).—Steel operations have now reached the highest estimated rate since last summer, stimulated by heavy contracting for the second quarter prior to price advances and increasing releases for railroad materials.

Mills are urging prompt specifications against contracts as the trade otherwise foresees late pressure for deliveries when the quarter draws to a close.

Advanced prices filed for pig iron are now becoming effective following active purchases.

Nonferrous metals this week were generally quiet and somewhat irregular. Quiet domestic consumer demand for copper was attributed partly to delay in signing the copper recovery code which had been expected this week.

A decline in export prices below domestic parity also made buyers cautious, but producers firmly maintained the electrolytic quotation at 8½ cents Connecticut Valley owing to reports of increasing movement of finished products and a feeling of confidence said to be based on the statistical position of the metal.

Although tin prices recovered partially from their recent easiness, quotation changes were largely nominal in sympathy with advances in sterling exchange and at London where reports were in circulation that there would be no increase in production quotas at this time. Buying here was confined to small prompt lots.

Zinc declined $1 per ton as a result of dullness of demand at the higher levels and competition of sellers for a fair buying interest said to exist under the market. The tone was said to be steadier later in the week, as some sellers withdrew and premiums were being asked for forward shipment.

Lead remained steady and, although sales for the week were understood to be limited to carload lots for prompt shipment, smelters were said to be in a rather favorable position and were not pressing offerings. Unfilled orders on sellers' books were reported to be substantial.

Antimony was quiet, but quotably unchanged in the absence of Far Eastern developments.

Jarvis Is Indorsed For D.C.Boxing Job

Desire of the colored population for representation on the Boxing Commission of the District of Columbia was indicated yesterday when representatives from every colored fraternal, civic, and social organization met at the Musolit Club and indorsed W. Ernest Jarvis, colored business man and sportsman, for appointment by the Commissioners.

Perry W. Howard was directed by the committee to place before the Commissioners this morning representations as to the special fitness of Mr. Jarvis for this assignment, after two other colored men whose names had been directed sent to the Commissioners for this position had indicated their intention to decline in favor of him.

Members of a committee, headed by Campbell C. Johnson, secretary of the Twelfth Street Branch Young Men's Christian Association, which recently consulted with the Commissioners about appointment of colored men and women to positions under the District government, joined with the citizens' committee in approval of the Jarvis indorsement.

A petition for immediate circulation, Howard stated, will be drawn up today.

Capital Parley To Map Relief For Northeast

New England and Middle Atlantic Farm Aid Up Here Today.

Rehabilitation programs for destitute rural families in the Middle Atlantic and New England States will be discussed at a conference of State relief administrators and Federal officials at the Mayflower Hotel today.

The conference will be opened in the Pan-American room at 9:30 a. m. by Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Relief administrator, and will be in general charge of Col. Lawrence Westbrook. Appearing on the program will be Chester C. Davis, of the AAA; Jacob Baker, assistant Federal relief administrator; Dr. C. W. Warburton, of the Department of Agriculture Extension Service, and Louis Bean, economic adviser of the AAA.

In addition to State relief directors, Agriculture Extension Service workers and directors of women's work will be in attendance. Discussions will center on plans to aid rural families by providing part-time work and aiding families to raise their own food.

It was pointed out yesterday by Administrator Hopkins that the bulk of rural relief cases in the area to be discussed tomorrow are not farming families, although many own "subsistence live stock." The program under consideration provides for supplying necessary live stock and for putting all rural residents in a position to produce their own food. Cash requirements would be supplied through work on public or private projects.

Under the plans to be promoted at the conference, cash advances would be made to provide houses and land, garden tools and equipment, seed, feed, fertilizer and other necessities. Repayment would be allowed in toll from gardens and other foodstuffs, which might be useful to the relief administration.

Jewish Campaign Opens Tomorrow

Golda Meyerson, noted Palestinian labor leader, and Joseph C. Hyman, of New York, who has played a leading part in efforts to find a haven for German Jewish refugees, will be the principal speakers at a mass meeting tomorrow night launching the $35,000 United Jewish campaign.

Dr. Abram Simon, honorary chairman of the drive, and Edmund I. Kaufmann and Isidore Hershfield, cochairmen, will address the meeting.

According to Mr. Kaufmann the drive for funds will be the most urgent since the World War. The entire Jewish community of Washington is practically one in support of the campaign, he said, and he has every assurance that the $35,000 will be raised for relief of European Jews and Palestine rehabilitation.

Roosevelt's Classmates Boast They First Saw Leadership

Recall His Election When 20 Years Old to Post in Harvard Class.

The boast that members of the class of 1904 of Harvard University were the first to recognize the leadership ability of President Roosevelt by electing him marshal of the class was made last night in an interview with Henry J. Montoulieu, Cuban engineer, a member of the class.

Mr. Montoulieu came to Washington for the White House reunion of the President's classmates with his brother, Eduardo I. Montoulieu, also an engineer and member of the class.

"We take pride in boasting," Henry Montoulieu said, "that 30 years before the American people chose President Roosevelt to be their leader, we selected him to lead our class at Harvard. He was elected marshal in 1903, when only 20 years old. He was chosen because of his powerful character and great vision of righteousness, traits which were strongly in evidence when he was a Harvard undergraduate and the same characteristics which impelled the people of America to make him their leader at the most critical time in the world's history."

Both brothers were cum laude graduates, being the only two of five engineers in the class who were graduated with honors. Henry, a civil engineer, has been chief engineer of the Tropical Brewery at Havana for 11 years and was chief engineer of Havana for 20 years. As chief engineer of the Havana Aqueduct, he increased the water supply of Havana by 40 per cent.

His brother, Eduardo, was accompanied to Washington by his wife and two sons, Edward and Calixto. Mrs. Montoulieu lived here for a number of years with her uncle, Gen. Carols Garcia Velez, Cuban Minister to the United States when President Taft succeeded Roosevelt. She is the granddaughter of Gen. Calixto Garcia, the Cuban patriot who inspired Hubbard's famous "Message to Garcia."

Eduardo, a mining engineer, declares that revision of the reciprocity treaty between Cuba and the United States is imperative. The fact that it is unrevised is costing the United States $150,000,000, a year, he declared. He asserted that the American housewife is paying $250,000,000 more for her sugar than she would because "other interests" are concealing the fact that "the greatest sugar bowl in the world," Cuba, is only 90 miles from the shores of the United States.

CCC Contingent to Restore And Occupy Fort Frederick

Revolutionary War Strong Point One of Few to Survive.

Hagerstown, Md., April 22 (Spl.). With 132 youths, members of the Civilian Conservation Corps in camp, and an additional 70 expected within the next week, preparations are underway for the restoration of old Fort Frederick, one of the few pre-Revolutionary fortresses still in existence. The fortress and camp is located 15 miles west of here, on a bluff overlooking the Potomac River.

Capt. Harry V. Cargar, Pittsburgh, in charge of the contingent, said he understood that the stone walls will be restored and log barracks erected inside the fort as they were in 1755.

A study has been made of old records, describing walls and barracks and they will be restored to original specifications. The foundation of the officers' quarters were found several years ago during excavation work.

The platform around the inside of the fort, upon which the soldiers stood while engaged in battle, will also be rebuilt. The CCC has been recruited from Pennsylvania cities and towns.

George Washington visited Fort Frederick and during the Revolutionary War British prisoners were kept there.

Rediscovered Old Folk Tunes To Be Heard at Song Festival

Charlottesville, Va., April 22 (Spl.).—More than a dozen of the "latest discoveries" in the field of folk music have been scheduled for presentation on April 27 at the Virginia State Choral Festival, which opens here April 26 and will wind up next Saturday with the singing by 1,000 voices of Brahm's Requiem.

The folk program, completed by Mrs. John P. Buchanan, of Marion, the chairman, introduces many "new" airs collected from folk musicians that are unique and pulse quickening. Many are amusingly titled.

The program includes such songs as "Hell Broke Loose in Georgia," "Haste to the Wedding," "Raccoon Up the Gum Stump," "Gay Wife," "Seven Joys of Mary," "The Demon Lover," "Courtin' Sally Brown" and "The Jolly Hollow Reel."

The program is scheduled to begin with an introduction by John Powell, followed by a Dorian tune by Lloyd Fitzgerald. J. B. Wells will also fiddle "Natchez-on-the Hill" and "Beaver Dam." Mrs. Victoria Morris will follow with "Jack Went a-Sailing," which musicians claim is a splendid example of mixolydian air.

Wilbur Maupin, Mrs. Betty Smith, the Schuyler Band, the Shenandoah Band, Abner Keesee, John Morris, Mrs. Kit Williamson, J. H. Chisholm and John M. Hunt will follow in quick order.

Many old favorites are on the program.

Folk music lovers from all over Virginia and many from other States are coming to Charlottesville to hear this program, according to Vernon Kemp, secretary of the Virginia State Choral Festival Association.

Dr. G. Edmonds Quits Campaign For County Job

Montgomery Commissioners Post Sought for R. S. Chinn.

Withdrawal of Dr. George L. Edmonds, of Rockville, Md., from the race for the Montgomery County commissionership of the Rockville district was announced last night by State's Attorney Stedman Prescott, chairman of the Montgomery County Democratic Organization Committee.

Dr. Edmonds has secured the support of the county organization committee for the postmastership of Rockville, which will become vacant in February, Mr. Prescott said.

A delegation from Darnestown and Poolesville election districts, asking that Raleigh S. Chinn, of Rockville, be given the organization support for the post, conferred with members of the Democratic campaign committee last night. The request will be presented to the county committee for action later.

It is expected that Mr. Chinn will be indorsed since he is well known and liked throughout the upper sections of the county. He was born in 1893 and attended elementary and high schools in the county. He began his business career as manager of a store at Laytonsville, later moving to Rockville where he was associated with W. W. Welsh and at the latter's death beeame manager of the Welsh estate. He took a position as salesman with Reed Brothers, automobile dealers in Rockville in 1923.

Mr. Chinn married Miss Rebecca Nourse, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Upton D. Nourse, well-known residents of the upper section of the county, and the couple has one child. He has been a lifelong Democrat and is a resident of Rockville.

Rangers Tell Park History

New Service Is Tried at Reservations in Virginia.

Fredericksburg, Va., April 22 (Spl.).—An experimental ranger-historian service has been installed by officials of the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park, to remain in service during Garden Week, beginning today.

George A. Palmer, chief historian of the park, who trained the men so they will be able to explain the reservation and its history to visitors, said plans are being made to continue the service through the summer.

Ranger-historians will be stationed at the Chamber of Commerce information office at the northern city limits, park headquarters in the city, the National Cemetery and Hamilton's Crossing.

Park officials said the dogwoods will be in bloom during Garden Week and the park will be wearing its spring dress for the first time.

Post's Featured Residence Seen by Hundreds of Admirers.

The Washington Post model home at 3902 Benton street northwest, remains the residential sensation of the season. That B. H. Gruver, its builder, has produced a great home value, is evidenced by the acclaim the local public has given it. Hundreds of persons visit this house daily.

The response to the presentation demonstrates that local home lovers have waited years for this new and fine type of house at moderate price.

Built by Mr. Gruver, constructor of hundreds of the city's most excellent homes, this display dwelling is completely furnished by Hutchison, Inc., with draperies by John F. Ligon. It is notable for its electrically equipped kitchen and is referred to as "an electric kitchen health home."

The house will be open for inspection daily until 9 p. m. until further notice. To visit it, drive out Massachusetts avenue to Wisconsin avenue, turn south to Calvert street, west on Calvert street to Thirty-ninth street and south to the home. Another route is out Q street to Thirty-seventh street, north on Thirty-seventh street to Tunlaw road, then north one block to Benton street and west to the house.

Fall of Curry.

Whether or not the Administration intervened in the fight against John F. Curry, the downfall of this Tammany chieftain was largely a result of his own blunders. It was not necessary for Postmaster General Farley to take an active part in the controversy. Curry became a victim of his almost arrogant persistence in being wrong. Stubbornness, frequently far from intelligent, marked his career as a political boss.

Under Curry's leadership, Tammany opposed Roosevelt for the nomination for the Presidency, and with Walker as spokesman, carried the fight in the 1932 convention against Farley and Flynn. Curry opposed the nomination of Lehman for governor although both Roosevelt and Smith wanted it. Out of a false sense of loyalty to Walker, Curry pledged himself to renominate him for the mayoralty, even after Walker had resigned under fire and was in such public contumely as to make exile seem desirable.

But those moves were less disastrous than more recent maneuvers. Refusing McKee renomination, although McKee was going well at the time, Curry picked the "bumbling" Surrogate O'Brien and elected him mayor of New York. O'Brien proved to be one of the most inept public figures of recent times. Curry did not heed the warning of 242,000 "write-in" votes for McKee, who was not a candidate, and persisted, against the advice of his leaders, in renominating O'Brien.

Many of his lieutenants have held Curry personally responsible for Tammany's loss of the mayoralty and loss of power. They have argued that had he nominated Grover Whalen, or some other more popular and more able figure than O'Brien, McKee would not have run, the vote would not have been split and LaGuardia would not have been elected. More important to district leaders, their henchmen would not have been thrown off the pay rolls.

Mr. Farley is to be consulted on reorganization of Tammany Hall. It may be assumed that the new regime will be acceptable to him. Attempts are being made to elect Edward J. Ahearn as Curry's successor, although leadership may be temporarily entrusted to a steering committee. The important thing, however, is that the Tammany machine has deposed its boss for the first time in 130 years, and some sort of reorganization is in progress.

The Soviet Bond Issue.

Reports that the Soviet government has launched a popular bond-selling drive comparable to our war-time Liberty Loan campaigns may surprise those who do not realize that Russia, under Communism, continues to depend upon monetary and credit systems developed under private capitalism. Of course the Russian system has been radically modified to accommodate it to a gigantic scheme of state planning under government ownership and control.

Modern industry requires investments in large amounts of fixed capital, such as tools, machinery and buildings. The Russian government has been concentrating its efforts upon the rapid development of such production facilities in order to lay a broad foundation for later expansion of consumers' goods and a rise in living standards. The financing of an expansionist program of this sort is a vital problem.

The chief difference between the Russian solution and that which prevails under a competitive system is that the Russian government through its planning agencies undertakes to determine what percentage of the national income shall be devoted to particular forms of production, regardless of immediate consumer needs or desires. Under capitalism it is the latter which determines the trend of production and investment.

As in a capitalistic economy, money income in Russia supplies the purchasing power which buys the services and goods allocated to various employments. Consequently, when the government wishes to utilize part of the income distributed as wages among the people to finance expansion plans, instead of permitting all that income to be spent on present enjoyments, it may float a popular loan. The returns from that loan will supplement resources for expansion already available to the government.

Although the announced popular bond issue is to be placed through voluntary subscriptions, persuasion backed by the kind of pressure described in news dispatches is hard to distinguish from compulsion. However, the investor will receive a loan yielding 10 per cent interest—a very high rate, indeed, indicating that the sacrifice imposed upon the workers who forego a right to spend their limited earnings is a very real one.

The present loan is only one in a series of offerings that have been sold during the past four years. With the state virtually the sole borrower of capital, and with workers' incomes close to subsistence margin, according to American standards, there is little immediate prospect that Russia will build up a class of privileged capitalists in her midst. But the mechanism for creating such a class undoubtedly exists. State Socialism of the Russian type has not destroyed investment for a profit; it has merely restricted it within narrow limits.

An Unforeseen Dilemma.

In signing the Bankhead bill President Roosevelt gave it very doubtful indorsement. The cotton States, he said, "have asked for the use of Federal powers. A democratic government has consented." But the President did not accept this measure for regimentation of cotton growers as an integral part of his program for the rehabilitation of agriculture. It is apparent that the Bankhead act carries the agricultural experiment beyond his original conception of it.

Behind the President's lukewarm attitude is a positive hostility toward this act on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture. Numerous objections were raised by Mr Wallace in the congressional hearings. A few days before the bill became law he declared: "The whole thing is abhorrent to us." Yet the Administration has accepted this extension of bureaucracy and autocratic domination over the farm to make effective the program of voluntary acreage reduction previously adopted.

The original idea behind the New Deal for agriculture was not based on regimentation. Farmers were asked merely to rent part of their land to the Government. In this way they might enhance their income and reduce burdensome surpluses. A majority was willing to cooperate, but some insisted on expanding their output, thus taking advantage of the higher prices brought about through the sacrifice of others. Demands for enforcement of restrictions upon the so-called chiselers arose from the farm belt. The Bankhead act, with its ponderous bureaucratic machinery and its tyrannical encroachment upon individual rights, thus becomes a logical sequence to the AAA program whether the Administration likes it or not.

Farmers have accepted the Bankhead act as a measure to force the noncooperating growers into line. But it is much more than that. By urging the AAA to use compulsion against the recalcitrants they have put their heads into the noose of complete bureaucratic domination of agriculture. Regimentation for cotton seems to foreshadow regimentation for wheat, corn, cattle, hogs and all other major crops. At present the AAA is definitely moving in that direction, even though it is repugnant to many officials who are formulating our agricultural policy and to those farmers who understand its implications.

To some extent the AAA has lost control of the forces it set in motion. Its paternalism is merging into tyranny. Experiments of this sort were launched on the theory that the Government could turn back and try something else when it was confronted by failure. Now it is evident, however, that reversal of a policy may be impossible. One step leads to another and then another, until dictatorship may become the only alternative to chaos. Probably the weakest point in the New Deal is its failure to recognize the seeds of revolution in what it has innocently called "economic experiments."

The same tendency may be noted in the recovery spending program. Administration leaders have learned, rather belatedly, that it is extremely difficult to check a lavish outpouring of funds when it is once started. Several recent efforts to "put on the brakes" have been upset by Congress. The psychology of squandering can not be snapped on and snapped off like an electric light switch.

Some of the dangers of formulating policies without regard to their ultimate consequences are now coming to light so plainly that they can not be ignored. In a large measure these developments are responsible for the growing inclination on the part of the public to regard every Administration experiment from the viewpoint of fundamental principles.

The Tuberculosis Report.

With commendable dispatch the Special Tuberculosis Investigating Committee has submitted its report to the District Commissioners. It was not necessary to make an exhaustive study of conditions here. The prevalence of tuberculosis and the lack of facilities to fight it are well known. The chief function of the committee was to center attention upon this problem and to outline a definite program looking toward its solution.

Two principal objectives are apparent in the report: First, to coordinate all anti-tuberculosis activities. Second, to secure more adequate facilities for treatment of the disease. The committee recommends "that all health activities connected with tuberculosis should be centered in a full-time tuberculosis officer in the Health Department," and that an advisory board be appointed to aid in the formulation of policies. New facilities requested include a 500-bed adult sanatorium, an adequate free tuberculosis clinic and more extensive visiting-nurse service.

It is unfortunate that a difference of opinion has arisen over the coordination of activities under a tuberculosis officer. Dr. Fowler, District Health Officer, complains that the committee's recommendation would result in divided authority within his department. Other members of the committee disclaim any intention of removing tuberculosis matters from the general supervision of the Health Department. Their purpose is one of coordination, of centralizing responsibility on one man who would be under supervision of the Health Department.

So majority and minority reports have been filed when there is apparently no substantial basis for disagreement. In a matter so vitally affecting the health of the people this seems particularly unfortunate. If action is to be obtained, a united front is essential. Citizens of Washington, menaced by the prevalence of tuberculosis, have a right to expect that the Health Officer, who is chairman of the committee, will call another meeting and iron out secondary differences so that this program may be presented to Congress with unanimous support.

Standing Firm.

The firm stand which the President has taken against efforts to pass inflationary silver bills, whether permissive or mandatory, is highly commendable. Mandatory legislation of the kind that the Congressional silver bloc desires would be fatal to monetary stability. Permissive legislation, authorizing extensive purchases of silver, would also have seriously disturbing psychological effects, even if the President refused to exercise the powers conferred upon him.

Rational arguments, based on facts and buttressed by experience, appear to produce little impression upon the rank and file of silver advocates. However, they can hardly fail to have been somewhat shaken by the President's exposition of the fantastic character of proposals to raise world silver prices from less than 50 cents per ounce to $1.29. With 11,000,000,000 or more ounces of silver believed to be in existence, even the heavy purchases authorized by the Dies bill would, as the President says, be only a "drop in the bucket." International action is required to assure any substantial rise in the world price of silver, and the evidence shows that rapid advances would not be welcomed by the rest of the world. Certainly, silver-using countries wish to avoid the deflationary effects of higher silver values.

A very telling argument against the silver-buying program is the President's frank admission that gold-buying plans have not come up to expectations as a means of raising prices. Yet the United States is in a position to make its gold-buying prices in terms of dollars effective by taking a "pretty large proportion of the total gold supplies of the world." However, the major danger from the proposed silver buying does not come from alleged ineffectiveness in raising prices. On the contrary, it lies in the inflationary potentialities of such practices. With confidence in currency stability destroyed by efforts to remonetize silver, prices would probably begin to rise rapidly, but the advance would be the result of a panic flight from a discredited currency—not a controlled form of inflation such as Congress professes to want.

In The Sugar Bowl.

When the Administration first considered designating sugar as a basic commodity its chief aim appeared to be rehabilitation of Cuba. But as the sugar bill passed the Senate the interests of domestic producers take first place. Only the growers of domestic beets and cane are given definite quotas. Producers in Puerto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, the Virgin Islands and Cuba will be governed by quotas to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Secretary Wallace recently predicted that the income of domestic beet growers would be doubled by this bill. "The quota of 1,450,000 tons of sugar as suggested in the President's message," he said, "is greater than any single year's sales of continentally produced beet sugar on the American market." Since these statements were made the Senate has increased the domestic quota for beet sugar to 1,500,000 tons. Regardless of what may be the attitude of the Administration, it is apparent that Congress is still determined to play Santa Claus to the domestic industry.

The increased domestic quota will make it necessary to reduce the allotments to insular producers. Puerto Rico and Hawaii are complaining vigorously against what they consider discrimination in favor of beet growers. Both islands are part of the United States, even though they do not enjoy statehood. Should not their inhabitants be placed on a basis of economic equality with citizens on the mainland? An intricate question of insular policy is thus raised.

Similar protests are coming from the Philippines. With Congress authorizing a quota upon Philippine sugar and imposing a tax on coconut oil, thousands of Filipinos are beginning to wonder whether they favor an independence which implies economic isolation from the United States. In Cuba the Mendieta government is eagerly watching the progress of the sugar bill. Rehabilitation of Cuba hinges upon revival of that country's sugar industry, which in turn is largely dependent upon a market in the United States.

It would be impossible, of course, to satisfy all these conflicting interests. Mutual sacrifice is necessary to end overproduction and relieve glutted markets. But it does not appear that the sacrifice has been entirely even. The Senate has been more generous to the domestic producers than it has been thoughtful of the situation in Cuba, partly induced by our past policy toward that island.

A Parade of the Past From the Files of The Post.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

TWELVE PERSONS were killed and approximately 50 injured in a battle at Vera Cruz, which was seized by the United States forces. Gen. Carranza, in demanding these forces' withdrawal, said that the attack was "a declaration of war on all Mexico." President Wilson was described as "sad, disheartened and weary" by the turn of events.

THE ENTIRE State militia was ordered to Denver, Colo., to be ready for immediate service at the Trinidad strike zone, where several had already been killed in strike disputes in the coal field. The usual blame for disorders was made against the strikers by the operators.

TEN YEARS AGO TODAY.

A JURY in Philadelphia found that Harry K. Thaw, murderer of Stanford White, was now sane and competent to handle the affairs of his estate. Counsel for Evelyn Nesbit said they would appeal the finding.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE addressed the Associated Press in New York, declaring he favored an arms parley when the reparations dispute was ended. As he left New York a large crowd gathered there dashed from his train to an incoming track to catch a glimpse of Celia Cooney, New York's first "bobbed-hair bandit," who, with her husband, was being brought back by police from Jacksonville, Fla., where she was arrested.

Letters to the Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

A Blow to the Retired.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer entreats you to draw attention to an angle of the recently enacted economy bill which has, up to the present, escaped comment or criticism.

The angle referred to is that contained in section 204, which states, in part, "That no person heretofore or hereafter separated from the service of the United States or the District of Columbia under any provision of law or regulation providing for such retirement on account of age shall be eligible again to appointment to any appointive office, position, or employment under the United States or the District of Columbia."

The enactment of this law has inflicted a needless cruelty and injustice on a great number of faithful Government servants who are debarred thereby from adding to their meager pensions at the kind of work at which they have served a lifetime. Many of these old employes had purchased homes, yet unpaid for, which they, under the then existing law, would have had four years "as of course" extensions of service in which to safeguard their homes. The sudden cutting short of the time by the operation of section 204 has caused some to lose their homes by foreclosure of mortgages and is leaving many more in the same danger.

As for employment under the District of Columbia, it is contended that an unfair discrimination is made between the States and the District. The economy bill has no power to prescribe those who may be employed by the States, nor should it have in the case of the District of Columbia.

Mississippi Mix-Up.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Out here in Mississippi we have the most unfortunate road mix-up in the Nation today. The governor and the State highway commission are at daggers' points on any program that means betterment of roads, a thing that Mississippi needs greatly.

Recently I began a campaign for Federal funds to reopen the old Natchez Trace from Nashville to Natchez, Miss., and as soon as I lined up 27 people who favored the proposition and persuaded Congressman Busby, of Mississippi, to agree to introduce a bill for $25,000,000 with which to construct the old road, dissension broke out and the 27 split up into four factions, each trying to dictate to the others, and now we have the sorry spectacle of every one for himself and the Devil for all.

It begins to look like Mississippi's bitter political factions will cause the State to lose this road.

JIM WALTON.

A D. C. Subway.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To safeguard the pedestrian and facilitate traffic, why not build an open subway, lower the grade of the roadway 4 feet and build an ornamental inclined bridge diagonally across the intersection 4 feet high at the curb that would give 8 feet clearance, with an incline from the bridge to the street car platform. All buses and cabs would load and unload at the platform. All commercial trucks would load and unload at the street level.

Build steps from the pedestrian walk to the bottom of the subway. Plant part of the inclined bank with flowers and grass, leave the alleys at their present level with an incline from the subway to the alley with a bridge 4 feet high for pedestrians. All trucks would be of standard height. Other details and safeguards could be worked out. This would start 10,000,000 of the unemployed to work.

CHARLES DUNN.

Washington, April 18.

An Issue Needed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As Prof Hall noted in last Sunday's Post it is quite true that unless and until there arises an issue which dominates others as the sine qua non of successful democracy, partisan politics can be little more than a system of political brokerage. As such it is certain to be financed and dominated by interests which will seek to prevent the development of a dominant issue that might interfere with the brokerage game.

There is reason for thinking, however, that this can not go on much longer without disastrous results to American democracy, and that reason lies in the fundamental injustices of our banking and currency system. It is difficult not to feel that the confusion of conflicting policies in the New Deal is not almost a deliberate attempt to obscure the money issue and prevent a popular gathering around an intelligent monetary reform, which might upset political control of the value of the dollar and establish a calculable and definitive stability as "a policy, not an expedient." The President's assurances as to this have failed to materialize, for the uncertainties of a policy of secrecy in fiscal affairs do not constitute anything but an expedient that is little short of vicious in its implications toward maintenance of equality of opportunity under a democratic Government in which the suffrage has not become a mockery of popular power.

ALDEN A. POTTER.

Washington.

"Tough Guy."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After reading the President had said "I'm a tough guy," and "the time has come for the President to get tough," I went to the Constitution to find just how tough a President could get and yet retain the good will of the people. In vain I scanned that part of the Constitution pertaining to the duties of the President, for I found nothing at all about a President being "a tough guy." I then turned to Webster, that I might become informed as to the two words in the sentence, "tough" and "guy," and here is what I found: "Tough—A vicious person, a rowdy." "Guy—A person of grotesque appearance or dress." Such being the case it seems to me that this "tough guy" stuff has gone about as far as it should go in public print, if we desire for the President to hold the proper respect in the minds of the people of other nations, as they may not look upon the matter so lightly as it is looked upon here in America.

It is entirely un-American to entertain the thought of elevating to such a place of honor a person with a "vicious" nature or character. And under the "Old Deal" the American people have only placed men of honor and greatness of character in the Presidential chair.

Ocean Mail Contracts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I hope that it is not an impertinence to ask Senator Black in this letter through your columns, Why do my London papers invariably take 12 to 15 days to arrive here (15 miles from Philadelphia)? I take it that this is explained by some peculiar fact of ocean mail contracts which are as difficult to fathom as the middle of the ocean, but these contracts are pertinent to the present investigators.

ALFRED BIDDLE.

Newtown Square, Pa., April 11.

Legalized Sin.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." And when our Nation voted to legalize the liquor traffic, it voted to legalize sin. Because I know from what I have seen and heard that alcoholic beverages are one of the greatest curses known to humanity. But I wish to add the testimony of some of the most intelligent and successful business men and women. The late Thomas A. Edison said that alcohol acts on the brain like sand on oil bearings." Gladstone said "liquor has caused more harm than all wars, famine and pestilences," and Evangeline Booth said "drink has drained more blood, hung more crepe, sold more homes, plunged more people into bankruptcy, armed more villains, slain more children, snapped more wedding rings, defiled more innocence, blinded more eyes, twisted more limbs, dethroned more reason, wrecked more manhood, dishonored more womanhood, broken more hearts, blasted more lives, driven more to suicide and dug more graves than any other poisoned scourge that ever swept its death-dealing waves across the world." Henry Ford does not want a man among the many thousands he hires to even defile his breath with liquor.

Therefore, I am bound to take sides with the Baptist General Association and the East End Baptist Church of Richmond in adopting the resolution condemning any member of the church who accepts any position with the liquor board. Respectable people should try and stamp out an evil and not try to regulate it. L. L. POUND.

The First Silver Bloc.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter of Miss Brandt, of April 17, on working wives, makes me write as a Western girl. These patriotic women, like the silver bloc, think only of the Jack Horner pie and what plums they can get out of it. Judas betrayed his Master for 30 pieces of silver. That was the first silver bloc in the Christian era.

To think that our President is at their mercy!

Publicity Seekers.

Walt Whitman said he loved to stand and look at animals because they are so placid and self-contained. A few days ago a placid kitten bit a man's ear; he awoke to find his house full of smoke, and escaping, saved himself and the kitten. A parrot in the Alexander Home for Children at Charlotte, N. C., lost his equanimity when he smelled gas, and flew to the superintendent, crying "Come quick, come quick!" The superintendent came and turned off the gas. A boy in London, England, was awakened by a noise which he thought was caused by mice nibbling through the ceiling, and found it the crackling of flames. Well, there were no real mice in the case, so let that one go. A self-contained cow in Hanford, Calif., committed hara-kari by eating a lot of wire nails.

A great horned owl owned in Monmouth, Ill., has hatched four chickens. A tomcat in Vermilion, S. D., has hatched only one. A rattlesnake at Medford, Oreg., attacked a car and punctured a tire with its fangs. In Glenwood, Iowa, the courthouse clock went haywire because pigeons used the hands as a merry-go-round. Merrillan, Wis., reports a calf with five legs and six hoofs.

"Material for the Press"

Postoffice, Monday.

NO matter how hard your lot, you should always evoke the consolation that it might be a lot—worse.

There are certain of our Washington newspaper-collaborators perpetually complaining against the elusive departmental "handouts" here and against summaries for publication dispensed by the alphabetical agencies. But we have just been looking over a file of old communiques issued for correspondents accredited to the League of Nations, and we want to tell the local boys that they don't know when they are (relatively) well off.

* * * *

As it now exists abroad, the official communique is a literary form that originated in European Ministries of Foreign Affairs. It was later cultivated with marked success by War Ministries. But it did not reach its present perfection until, having passed through the hothouse of the Peace Conference, it was transferred to Geneva's rich flourished there! No week day have demonstrated that any known plant can, with proper care, flourish.

And how the communique has flourished there! No weekday passes without at least one blooming. In "good growing-weather," the bourgeonings would shame an acre of sweet-peas.

The general run is useful. The really decorative ones, however — the pride of the literary Burbanks —are produced for two frequently arising conditions. They are resumes of any secret meeting;

(A) Issued when the news is deemed too unimportant for transmission to the press in extenso;

(B) Or when the news is deemed too important for transmission to the press in extenso.

* * * *

Is your memory honest enough to remind you that in 1931 some inhabitants of this optimistic earth thought the depression had reached its worst? Well, some did. The League was not among them, but it was well aware of the existence of a depression, and so it sensibly summoned a conference at which Europe's most proficient economic doctors were to diagnose civilization's disease.

The experts arrived from all four quarters of the European compass. They met in secret, which was wise. But mankind awaited anxiously those communiques which would record their progress.

Here is an honest sample:

"The conference continued its work this morning. Prof. OLIN summarized the ideas which had emerged from the statements made yesterday. M. FUSS, representing the International Labor Organization, drew attention to the studies undertaken by that organization of the aspects of the crisis which relate to labor. He summarized the conclusions to which these led. M. DORE, representing the International Institute of Agriculture in Rome, drew the conference's attention to the work of the International Institute of Agriculture. The conference then proceeded to an exchange of views."

* * * *

Not a lie in a carload! You may mildly criticise this form of reporting as a trifle sketchy, but it is also serious. Humor enters by accident only.

Nevertheless, it does sometimes enter. The humanitarian achievements of Josephine Butler deserve to be long remembered. It is to be regretted that one League communique-composer recently forgot them. Unkind gossip declared that, on the night previous, he had attended Geneva's Alhambra, where there was performing a certain American negress whose dancing is very popular abroad. Anyhow, the communique-composer next day ended his report of an International Child-Labor Conference with the statement that "the delegates concluded their session by unanimously adopting a resolution in praise of the child welfare work of 'Josephine Baker.'"

* * * *

Some while ago, when the league began to feel, in its corporate capacity, the slings and arrows of this out-of-joint era, a proposal for economies within the secretariat came before a special committee. The secretariat's threatened staff was ably represented; so were the purse-string holders. High words passed at a secret session. After it, every secretariat stenographer told her nearest friend that her immediate boss told her that his section-head told him that, for a league meeting, this meeting was nothing short of sensational.

Yet here is what the communique told the correspondents:

"The committee held a general discussion, in the course of which statements were made by Lord Cecil and others. It then proceeded to a detailed examination of the question of the length of contracts of the staff. Explanations were followed by a thorough discussion in which all took part."

* * * *

We have said that this sort of thrilling veracity reaches its perfection in league communiques. But the type is not confined to them. It is discoverable at nearly all international conferences, league and nonleague. For nowadays the nonleague conferences are cannily hiring league communique-writers. The writers are mostly young fellows who have acquired their training in various foreign offices, and they do not underrate themselves.

Once, at the Geneva railroad station, we informed a train guard that he was to have among his passengers a distinguished trio: Grandi, Tardieu, Henderson. It only saddened him:

"League diplomats never tip well," he mourned.

Innocently we repeated this to one of the communique-literati.

"But, you see," he cried, "we diplomats are so poorly paid!"

If they are, it's outrageous.

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

I HAVE thought so for a long time but after reading Prof. Tugwell's speech before the newspaper publishers Saturday, I am definitely satisfied that the wrong emphasis has been placed on this man. He is not a Bolshevik, an administrator, a revolutionary, a writer, an ambitious tyrant or a speechmaker. He is a singer, that's what he is. He is the itinerant bard stepped suddenly from the story books into our hectic midst.

Nowhere in that array of beautiful words can one put his finger on a plot or a plan, or even on a definite statement or a concrete fact. Seriously, I'll defy anyone to tell me what he said. But that he sounded mighty pretty there is not the slightest doubt. He sang.

BARGERON.

Yes sir, a scop, a gleeman of the villages and highways of Old England, of the quieting hills and valleys of France, the wandering troubadour strutting now across our troubled horizon, alternately gay and melancholy, but always musical!

It has been a long time since I have seen such pretty phrases, such dancing words as appeared in his presentation of Saturday night. They were little fairies at times, little sprites doing a jubilant dance, and again there came a procession of gnomes with their funny little hoods and gowns. Occasionally there was a sprinkling of real witches such as we have on Halloween. The professor is not a planner or a schemer, he is the songster of the New Deal.

* * * *

The gay humor of his surging moods is priceless in itself, as when he sang Saturday that it is not regimentation that the New Deal is trying to impose on us, that it is trying instead to get us out of the regimentation we already had, that really what it is trying now to do is to democratize us. That was good—and thought provoking, too, as all good songs should be.

And the thought must be that the way to meet the degree of regimentation we already had is to set up a bigger and stronger counter-regimentation. I do not mean to say that he said this. He said nothing definite, in fact. He was as elusive as the mocking bird flitting from tree to tree and from note to note.

There was the evasiveness about him of the dancing veils, a shimmering thing of beauty that disappeared when you tried to grasp it.

The way to full enjoyment of it was not to think or seek to understand the words you heard, but rather just to close your eyes and lean back. In this manner it was better than having camphor ice applied to an aching head.

* * * *

I have not seen the likes of the professor since my boyhood in a small town favored by the wandering evangelists. No one painted more enchanting pictures of the hereafter if you were good, and more hideous descriptions of the place you went to if you were bad. But on details, on specific promises, on fact-producing discussion, these evangelists were very, very vague.

For example, I could never pin one down to saying that in heaven we were all given wings.

"Now you just be good and see," they would say, and that is as definite as they would be.

The professor said, in effect, that the New Deal didn't intend to be pinned down with any definite labels or terms of what it had in mind. The only appropriate description, said he, was a "more abundant life." Ah, there he was off to his poetry again.

* * * *

Frankly, I think we should quit worrying about the professor. Do you know that just as it was impossible to get a single definite, or really meaningful statement from his speech of Saturday night, so has it been impossible for me to put my finger on a single thing he has definitely done in this Administration.

I don't believe he is supposed really to do anything but sing.

If we take him in this light, his presence will be soothing, not provocative as when we consider him otherwise.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Raising the Wage Level.

Boss—Men of the National Pants Corporation, I have an announcement to make to you.

First Workman—More bad news!

Boss—It is my painful duty to announce that I am raising the pay of every man and woman in this great factory. . . .

First Workman—You can't put anything like that over on us. We don't deserve it.

Boss—I know you don't deserve it, boys, but my decision is final. You have got to take more money.

Second Workman—We won't stand for it.

Boss—I know how you feel, but have I ever raised your pay before?

First Workman—No, I gotta say that for you, boss.

* * * *

Boss—You boys have been with me ever since you were children, nigh onto 30 years some of you, and this is the first I have ever asked you to take more money. And you kick!

Second Workman—You don't seem to realize, boss, we've been through a depression. And the minute things pick up a little you go spring a wage raise on us. It ain't fair.

Boss—It isn't my fault, boys. It's Government orders.

* * * *

First Workman—Suppose we workers give in every time you want to raise our wages. What happens? Before we know it we are in the big money.

Second Workman—Right in the upper brackets. Just a set-up for the income tax!

Third Workman—Why, men, it's all a dirty plot to shift the money from the capitalists' pockets into the workingman's pocket so we'd have to pay all them surtaxes.

Boss—I realize high wages are a hardship in America today, but the working classes should play fair and take just as much money as the employers.

First Workman—If we accept, how do we know you won't give us another raise pretty soon?

Boss—It will all depend on conditions. Business in America may be so lousy two months from now that I WILL HAVE TO DOUBLE YOUR SALARIES ALL OVER AGAIN.

First Workman—In other words, the lousier business gets the more money we'll be asked to take.

Boss—I'm afraid that's about it.

First Workman—It's a racket. The lousier business gets the more taxes Uncle Sam will put on wages. If we accept big salaries we'll have to pay all the taxes while these bosses go broke and don't pay a dime!

Concerning Insects More Destructive Than Human Armies

By Robert Quillen

At a certain time of year, depending on the locality—the present time, in some regions—you will observe a swarm of minute flying insects called "flying ants."

If they are true ants, they will have a wasp-like waist. If the waist is large, they are not ants but termites.

After flying a short distance, always toward the sun unless the wind drives them away, they choose their mates, alight on the ground and shed their wings.

Each mated pair then becomes king and queen of a new colony.

There are fifty species of termites in the United States and only three States are free of them.

The commonest and most destructive is the kind that lives underground. The queen lays 75,000 eggs at a clip, and these hatch into three distinct castes—the reproducers, the soldiers with armor-plated heads and shoulders and great saw-toothed jaws, and the more numerous workers.

Since they live always in darkness, the workers are blind. They are a sickly gray-white in color, their body covering is thin and soft, and they look both helpless and harmless.

Yet these tiny, hidden creatures can destroy great bridges and wreck the largest buildings, and today they are undermining 65 per cent of America's homes.

Wherever wood touches the ground, their presence may be suspected. They feed on stumps and scraps of lumber left under buildings at the time of construction.

The build blind tunnels up the face of a brick wall or a concrete pillar. Once in the woodwork, they eat their way to higher floors and begin work on rugs, books and furniture—any substance that is cellulose and stationary.

Because my floors were sinking, I had my house examined today. Sills, sleepers and sub-floors were as hollow as honeycomb.

Fortunately, there is a way to exterminate these house wreckers, but as a rule their presence is not suspected until the damage is done. The only safeguard is to build with treated lumber and keep wood off the ground.

3 Persons Hurt As Police Seek 2 Auto Drivers

Miss Jennie Jakubec in Serious Condition at Emergency Hospital.

Three persons were recovering last night from injuries received early yesterday in two hit-and-run accidents.

Miss Jennie Jakubec, 40, found unconscious in the roadway near Nevada avenue and Broad Branch road northwest, is confined to Emergency Hospital with head and internal injuries. Her condition was reported serious.

Police, meanwhile, are searching for two motorists, one of whom is believed to have felled Miss Jakubec and another who fled from the scene of an accident at Twenty-second and G streets northwest.

Two out-of-town visitors were hurt in the latter crash. Miss Helen Sherman, 29, and Miss Mae Hallow, 25, both of Greensburg, Pa., were treated for severe lacerations at Emergency Hospital. They were passengers in the machine of Mrs. E. H. Humble, 2900 block of Connecticut avenue northwest.

It was at first believed that Miss Jakubec, a housemaid in the home of Capt. Louis Montfort, U. S. A., 5100 block of Broad Branch road northwest, was a victim of foul play. Neighbors, however, reported seeing a large sedan speed from the scene several minutes before she was found in the roadway.

Bausells Face Trial In Double Slaying

Father and Son Accused in Wythe Murder.

Wytheville, Va., April 22 (AP).—Trial of Henry Bausell and his son, Dernace, both of Bristol, for the slaying of the latter's wife and her father, is scheduled to begin in Wythe County Circuit Court here tomorrow.

They will be tried first on the indictment for the murder of Mrs. Virginia Cornett Bausell, estranged wife of the younger Bausell.

The alleged slaying of Mrs. Bausell and her father, T. Eugene Cornett, occurred January 13 in a bedroom of the Cornett home in Wythe County. Cornett was shot to death and his daughter fatally injured. Both of the Bausells received bullet wounds in the affray.

Bullets taken from the bodies of the slain man and woman, as well as bullets found in the room, have been examined by ballestic experts who are expected to testify during the trial.

The Week Abroad

By Andre Vulliet.

Though it sounds like the death knell of disarmament negotiations, the French reply to Britain, after the first emotional reaction, should be read carefully and weighed accordingly.

This note is supposed to answer two questions. First, would the French government be ready to accept as a basis for a disarmament convention the British memorandum of January 29. This, broadly speaking, called for a complete equality of the armies of France and Germany to be fixed somewhere between 200,000 and 300,000 men, and to be realized within four years. Second, what would be the French view on the nature of such guarantees as would make the execution of the convention possible.

Now, what do the French say?

They do not actually answer the questions of the British, having already rejected their memorandum in a previous note dated March 19. They simply declare that, since Germany, "without awaiting the results of negotiations which were in progress," shows "the determination to continue every form of rearmament within limits of which she claims to be the sole judge," even to the extent of appropriating $100,000,000 for her Nazi troops, such bilateral negotiations have become useless.

Therefore, the whole problem, which is of equally grave concern to all the neighbors of Germany, can only be treated in Geneva. It must be taken up where it was laid down when Germany, banging the door, stepped out of the conference.

France Demands Security.

This sounds like the end. Meanwhile, "even before seeking the discovery of whether agreement can be obtained upon a system of guarantees of execution, sufficiently efficacious to permit her signature to a convention which would legalize a substantial rearmament of Germany," France, again, must see to it that her security be safeguarded.

In this last sentence lies what hope is left. It shows that France is not opposed to signing a convention "legalizing a substantial rearmament of Germany." It leaves the door open for further negotiations. But such negotiations must take place in Geneva.

The French, under their national government, seem fairly determined on this point as well as on guarantees of control. Will the Germans go back to Geneva? Will the British, unwilling to engage in an armament race, promise guarantees?

At this stage, any answer would be purely guesswork. But behind those two question marks lies the future of developments, which Italy watches without committing herself, convinced that the only solution will be found in her plan for a limitation of armaments. This is the opinion of many observers.

* * * *

Meanwhile, in case of definite failure France is seeking to patch up her network of friendships. Her Foreign Minister Barthou is now on a tour of the various capitals of Europe.

His visit to Warsaw will serve the purpose of dissipating in Poland the ill effects of the four-power pact, and in France of the recent German-Polish pact of nonaggression. The visit of Barthou to Prague will likewise be understood in Czechoslovakia as an evidence that France drew little benefit, if any, from the four-power pact and wants now to realign the friendship of the Little Entente.

Mr. Barthou may also go to Bucharest, returning the visit of Roumanian Foreign Minister Titulescu, now in Paris. It seems, at all events, that his round trip emphasizes an effort on the part of France to reject the policy of separate agreements, tentatively embarked on last year.

This last round-up of those who still believe in the League of Nations shows a determination by France to return to her traditional Geneva policy, seeing eye to eye with her political satellites.

A "battle of a deflationary country against inflationary nations," as Mussolini termed it, is being waged in Italy.

A decree went into effect last week, providing for drastic reductions in prices, rents, salaries, taxes. Civil service salaries were cut 6 to 12 per cent, cabinet ministers 20 per cent, rentals 12 to 15 per cent. The government will see that prices, throughout the country, are decreased accordingly.

1930 Results Good.

A similar step was taken in October, 1930, with good results. It is estimated that the cost of living declined from a level of 100 in June, 1927, to 73.78 in March, 1934.

The present measure, coming on the heels of a similar one taken in France two weeks ago, is highly significant as a further illustration of the determination of the gold bloc countries to overcome depression by orthodox means.

President Doumergue's action can not, of course, be so wide in range as Mussolini's. It can only affect those who receive salaries or pensions from the Government. The action on prices and rents is expected to follow slowly on the play of economic forces.

Yet, it appears that Doumergue has the situation well in hand. Strikes and social troubles did not come up to what was dreaded. Stocks, bonds and particularly government bonds are displaying great strength. Gold is flowing back to the Bank of France and the franc, leading the gold currencies, spurted last week above its gold parity with the dollar.

Confronted with a high price level which drastically affected their export and tourist trade, the gold countries prefer to fight their prices down rather than devalue their currencies.

No End of Books

By

Theodore Hall

I SEE that the steamship companies are getting out some pretty strenuous advertisements to prove that European travel is quite as feasible now as it ever was. What with uncomplimentary exchange rates, bully boys in brown, spy hysteria, and so on, many people have been given pause. There is nothing like a pause to afflict the steamship gentlemen in lower Broadway with chilblains. But I suspect the real trouble is that most Americans have already been to Europe.

Now few New Yorkers have visited both "Scratch Park," at 130th street and Third avenue, and the Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney apartment in River House—just as few Washingtonians have ever been inside the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. No country is without honor save among its own prophets. So while you are allowing that the European situation is fraught with interest, you might give an eye to a little traveling nearer home.

THEO. HALL.

Helen Worden's "Round Manhattan's Rim" (Bobbs-Merrill, $2.50) ought to fill you with a wanderlust to hike around New York. Miss Worden, in company with a friend, did precisely that—they started at the Battery and by a series of daily jaunts covered the 33 miles of Manhattan's shoreline all the way around and back to the Battery again. Much of the material gathered was printed in Miss Worden's column in the World-Telegram. Here it is all put between covers and illustrated by a lot of amusing little pen sketches Miss Worden did when she got home nights.

She is a first-rate reporter, active, eternally curious, breezy and informative. Nothing daunted her; she poked her head into all sorts of odd places, asked questions, chatted, made friends. Whether it was the Fulton Fish Market (Al Smith's alma mater—he boasts that he is a graduate of F. F. M.) or the B. E. F. encampment at Patchtown on the Hudson, or a trim little house in Sally's alley, Miss Worden seemed to get along famously. That is, everywhere except the New York Downtown Athletic Club.

"Ladies are not allowed in here," the clerk frowned. "It's even more restricted than the Y. M. C. A."

Miss Worden never loses sight of the past. Samuel Verplanck Hoffman has the largest collection of astrolabes in the country; he is also a descendant of a lady reputed to have been engaged to Washington Irving. When Miss Worden passes by the New York Central tracks, she adds a brief history of the railroad to her chats with watchmen. The Cunard and French Line piers bring up the story of steamships on the Atlantic.

Nor does she lose her sense of more recent history. At 59 Allen street was the stable where old Mr. Ridley, the department store miser, and his secretary were murdered. In St. Luke's Square she found Jimmie Walker's old home, as well as that of Starr Faithful. The householders in Lewis street used to watch for J. P. Morgan and Charles Mitchell, the first in his Rolls-Royce, the second in any old car, driving through every day. They could set their clocks by Morgan's passage.

On a pier at the foot of East Twenty-fifth street, 1,750 men sleep every night—the largest bedroom in the world. "Scratch Park" is known as the "Upper Bowery." A policeman said they could also call it "The Place Where the Derelict Follies Girls Go." At the upper end of the island the explorers found an acre-wide farm, growing pumpkins, tomatoes, and squash. "No stories!" yelled the woman from the farm house. "Every time papers say this only farm in New York, man raises rent!"

Stores and factories, ships and wharves, pent-houses and slums, Miss Worden writes of them all. Her book just goes to show how well and fully one can travel by shank's mare.

For a more ordered and less lively guide to New York, you might look up Walter R. Brooks' "New York: An Intimate Guide." (Knopf, 1934, $2.)

Eleanor Early, having written a gossipy little volume on Boston, now gives us one on Washington on "And This Is Washington!" (Houghton, Mifflin, $1.50.) She has filled it with tales of the people who have lived and worked here.

Any guide book will mention the Henderson Castle—Miss Early tells, among other choice items, of how Mrs. Henderson touched up the eyes on her portrait by Sargeant because they weren't blue enough. In connection with the old Ford Theater, Miss Early quotes a contemporary newspaper story which tells of that one fateful evening. "No Pulitzer prize for that boy," she comments—the reporter doesn't mention Lincoln's death until the seventh paragraph.

With hundreds of anecdotes and stories, this is by far the most entertaining story of Washington we have. It is also very conscientious as a guide book, mentioning everything from the hideous nude statue of Washington in the basement of the Smithsonian to the 2,200 acres of stamps printed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing every year. In fact, there's no need for you to go to the bureau after all.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Shakespeare's Birth and Death Day.

The twenty-third of April is usually celebrated as Shakespeare's birthday, though there are many who believe he was born on the twenty-second. We know that he died on the twenty-third, so that this day in this month has become forever associated with his name. He was christened on the twenty-sixth. The village of his birth, Stratford on the River Avon, in Warwickshire, is one of the loveliest places in England, and Americans who are going abroad this summer for the first time must be sure and visit it. There is the house where he was born, and the beautiful church where he was buried. It is a good idea to take a rowboat and row up and down the Avon and see the village and the church from the river.

At the grammar school Shakespeare had a good education and learned far more Latin than most college graduates in America; there were not many courses in the curriculum, and what they learned they learned well. It is certain that he did not take a course in "dramatics."

Although Shakespeare became the greatest writer who ever lived, his literary career lasted less than 20 years. He first began to be heard of in London about 1591, when he was 27, and apparently he stopped writing altogether about 1610, when he was 46. About 1600 he had an income from his writing, acting, and theatrical management equal to about $30,000 in American money. In 1605 he bought the best house in Stratford and went back to live there about 1611.

Shakespeare wrote the best plays, the best songs, and the best sonnets in the English language.

I wonder why he left London and stopped writing at the age of 46. Lytton Strachey had the quaint idea that he had lost interest in life; this seems to me the least probable of all suggested reasons. I can not imagine Shakespeare's interest in the world or in human nature lessening; but the writing of a succession of masterpieces may have produced nervous exhaustion, so that he could not go on. There is no doubt he loved his native village, and like thousands of Englishmen before and since, he made up his mind some day to "retire" and return there; only he really did it.

His Sonnets were first published in 1609, and they are filled with such tremendous passion and are so amazingly intimate in their expression that he may have found it uncomfortable to live in London after their appearance.

On March 16, 1616, he signed his will; on Thursday, April 23, he died, aged 52.

There are only two authentic portraits of Shakespeare: One is in the first collection edition of his plays, published in 1623, which Ben Johnson said looked exactly like him, and the other is the bust in Stratford church.

The best book in handy form, giving an account of Shakespeare's life and work, is called "Shakespeare of Stratford," written by Prof. Tucker Brooke, and published by the Yale University Press.

400 to Attend Yearly Virginia Science Parley

Latest Discoveries Will Be Demonstrated at Teachers College.

Harrisonburg, Va., April 22 (Spl.). Virginia scientists and teachers of science will assemble here May 4 and 5 for the twelfth annual meeting of the Virginia Academy of Science. The State Teachers College will act as hosts for the 400 visitors expected.

"Cold light" gives off little heat in contrast with the present light, which generates 3 per cent light and 97 per cent heat. The centrifuge can be rotated so rapidly that even the strongest steel can be broken by its spinning. Its many uses for physicists, chemists and medical workers will be demonstrated.

Jordan, University of Virginia; Prof. Ida Sitler, Hollins College; Prof. Maurice D. Allen, Hampden-Sydney College; Dr. T. McN. Simpson, Randolph-Macon College, and Dr. Sanger.

Entertainment features for the visitors will include the annual May Day festival at the college May 5.

Plants Reopening To Boost Pay Roll

Strasburg Industries Plan 150 More Workers.

Strasburg, Va., April 22 (Spl.). Increased industrial pay rolls for this city are indicated by plans being formulated to resume operations at the closed Shenandoah lime plant, and by tentative negotiations to establish a new quarry at Capon road, near here.

The Shenandoah plant has been closed for several months, during which time the management has been changed, and a general overhauling of its facilities for production and processing of lime has been in progress. No definite date, however, has been set for reopening the plant.

A survey of property in Bull's Neck Hollow, near Capon road, owned by the Standard Lime Co., has been completed, and indications point to the early establishment of a plant at this place. It is estimated that when these two industries begin functioning an additional 150 employes will be added to the pay rolls of the lime industry in this section.

A first offender loses his license to drive for a year and three months in the city; a second offender may not drive for three years. Persons who drive after their permits have been revoked may be fined from $100 to $1,000 and given a mandatory jail term of from one month to one year.

He suffered a heart attack at Washington and has been ordered to bed for several months by his physicians.

The meeting has been deferred probably until Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas comes here to visit his sister, Mrs. Bryant Heard.

Petitions, however, are in circulation calling for the local option campaign, and 45 dry workers in different wards are in quest of the 926 signatures of qualified voters to petitions necessary.

Quillen Convicted Of Curtis Murder

Given 60 Years After Trial in Gate City, Va.

Gate City, Va., April 22 (AP). Ervin Quillen was found guilty by a jury in Scott County Circuit Court here last night of first degree murder of Rhea Curtis and was sentenced to 60 years imprisonment.

Curtis disappeared following a dance at Hiltons six weeks ago last night, and his body was found April 7 in the Holston River near Kingsport, Tenn. His neck was broken and doctors testified at Quillen's trial that this and other injuries were received before Curtis fell or was thrown into the river.

Several witnesses testified they heard Quillen and Verlon McNutt, who was indicted along with Quillen, make threats of "beating up" Curtis.

The complete report is the largest on file at the courthouse, listing the name of each worker, and covers about ten pages. A systematic organization is shown, with each precinct captain and from 7 to 12 workers.

Two candidates for city councilman who were defeated for city council submitted their expense reports. Michel D. Reinhart spent $57.80 for advertising and printing and Clifton W. White expended $45.20 for advertising.

Storm Breaks On Patronage For Albemarle

Democrats Charge G. O. P. Gets Plums; Many Heads to Fall.

By J. K. Irving, Jr.

Charlottesville, Va., April 22.—Close on the heels of the recent action on the part of the Charlottesville City Democratic committee, and the Albemarle County Democratic committee, protesting the alleged parceling of patronage to Republicans, a storm of more than local proportions has broken.

At the moment it centers around E. B. Lewis, who was removed recently from the office of manager of the National Employment service here and replaced by E. C. Smoot with practically no notice. Naturally, this shift was looked upon as corollary to the joint committee meeting.

Political leaders, however, disclaim the implication that the change was the result of political machinations in spite of the fact that it was officially stated that Mr. Lewis had made a "good job" of his responsibility. But that is not generally accepted as being on the up and up, principally for the reason that the committee members had already made known their intentions of placing the spoils in the hands of the victors. As a matter of truth, it appears that these zealous Democrats have "stuck their necks out" and are now extremely anxious to withdraw them. Apparently it is too late.

Officials of the Federal service, of course, hasten to deny that in the shake-up any political pressure has been brought to bear, but since they, too, are subject to orders, no great interest is taken in their sincere disclaimers that there is no ground for the current belief that the political mill is grinding and that more heads may be expected to fall in the basket. The outsiders, especially those whose hopes for preferment have been discouragingly deferred, are enjoying the situation; the leaders are not.

Taking it by and large, the thing for the present is a tempest in a teapot, but one that bids fair to exceed that limitation. Apparently it is getting out of control and may blow pretty generally throughout the State. Little jobs and big ones, it is indicated, will come under preview and in the end there will be considerable action.

Back of it all, perhaps, is the fact that Jacob A. Garber, former Republican Representative, remains serenely fixed in the office of Collector of Internal Revenue N .B. Early. When, and if, he is let out, much of the pressure will be removed.

Candidates Listed At Lonaconing, Md.

Lonaconing, Md., April 22 (Spl.). At a special meeting of the mayor and town council last night, action was taken on petitions of citizens indorsing candidates.

As a result the municipal ticket for the election May 1 will be composed of the following:

For mayor, Hugh R. Muir, incumbent, and William O. Jones; council, Thomas Fisher, John D. Robertson and Douglas Waddell, incumbents; Jacob Moses and John W. Wilson; bailiff, Henry Ralston, incumbent, and Matthew Muir. Three councilmen are elected to serve two years, while the mayor serves one year. The holdover councilmen are George McCormick, George Donald and Lindley P. Nichols.

Hagerstown May Abandon Reservoir

Mountain Pipe LineOffered as Substitute.

Hagerstown, Md., April 22 (Spl.). The Smithsburg reservoir, one of three owned by the city, may be abandoned if plans submitted to the mayor and city council are approved. City officials inspected the two mountain reservoirs today.

Under the plan submitted by the water department 1,800 feet of pipe line would be constructed from the Edgemont reservoir and the additional water would be brought here by gravity. Hagerstown obtains during normal weather 3,300,000 gallons daily from its mountain supply, and the normal consumption here daily is 4,500,000 gallons.

New Market Plans May Day Festival

Pupils Will Parade and Stage Pageant.

New Market, Va., April 22 (Spl.). Plans for New Market's May Day Pageant, sponsored by the health committee of the high school, are being completed.

Arrangements call for a parade of school children led by the Glee Club. All "5-point" children of the institution will be next in the line, followed by floats illustrating some health point to be observed by the youngsters.

Following the parade a pageant, "Crowning of the May Queen by Robin Hood," and a May pole dance will be staged on the school grounds.

Monroe Shrine Waits Visitors At Fredericksburg This Week

Old Law Office Houses Furnishings Once in White House.

Fredericksburg, Va., April 22 (Spl.).—When visitors from many States come here to see the famous old homes during Garden Week in Virginia, they will have an opportunity of examining the first furnishings to grace the present White House in Washington, which repose in the James Monroe Law Office National Shrine here.

These furnishings, purchased by James Monroe for the embassy in France, were moved by him to the Governor's mansion in Richmond, where he served four years as chief executive. They were used as furnishings at Ash Lawn, his home near Charlottesville, and after the burning of the White House by the British, they were purchased by the Government, there being no suitable furnishings available in this country at the time. President James Monroe bought them back on leaving the White House and they remain in the possession of the descendants of Monroe.

The James Monroe Law Office National Shrine is one of the three splendid shrines to the author of the Monroe Doctrine to be found in Virginia. One is near Aldie, Oak Hill, which Monroe built while President, a home which is said to have the most beautiful location in Virginia.

The third is near Charlottesville, within sight of the beautiful home of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello. Ash Lawn is a modest place, surrounded by one of the loveliest box gardens and some of the finest trees to be found in Virginia.

The house also contains many possessions of Monroe, some of his writings and in the barn is his ancient carriage, which he took with him from Washington when he established his residence in New York.

Youth, 21, Returns To School as Jobs Elude "Unlearned"

Williamsport, Md., April 22 (Spl.). Thomas Rhodas Rhodes, 21, is back in public school by a special dispensation of the board of education.

Some years ago Rhodes quit school upon completion of the eighth grade. It was when he sought to obtain a job recently that he decided that he would complete school, only to learn that under the regulations of the board of education no one 21 years of age of over is permitted to enroll. At each place he had gone to look for work, he was asked whether he had completed high school. When he told a prospective employer that he had not, he found there was no job available.

The board of education at first turned down his application, only to reverse its ruling and permit him to reenter school.

Norfolk to Study Milk-Price Slash

Norfolk, Va., April 22 (Spl.). The milk price war which has been raging in Portsmouth since last Wednesday threatened to cross the Elizabeth River to Norfolk today.

Norfolk independent grocers have been called to meet tomorrow to determine what action should be taken to protect their interest against producers who are selling at one price in Norfolk and another in Portsmouth. W. L. Bailie, secretary of the grocers' association, said the Norfolk independent dealers might resort to boycotting producers who are not dealing fairly with the trade in both cities.

Gov. Peery, who was appealed to yesterday by J. W. Halstead, manager of the Producers' Cooperative Association, to stop the rate-cutting war, had taken no action up to tonight.

Dairymen Call War Councils In Maryland

Meet This Week to Map Battle Against AAA Curb in Albemarle.

Cumberland, Md., April 22 (Spl.). Allegany County dairymen, taking exception to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration's plan to reduce milk production here, will hold a series of meetings next week to formulate plans to fight the proposal, it was announced last night.

Believing that a forced curtailment of milk production will not help matters, the dairymen yesterday summoned producers to meetings in various sections of the county.

J. A. Conever, dairy specialist from the University of Maryland, will speak at all the meetings.

County dairymen are opposed to the AAA reduction program on the ground that there is no surplus production in this section. If dairymen are forced to curtail their production, it will be necessary to bring in milk from other sections to the injury of county farmers and dairies, it was asserted.

The first session will be held at 8 p. m. tomorrow at Midland for dairymen of the Georges Creek section. Dairymen of the Flintstone section will meet at 8 p. m. Tuesday. The final meeting will be held at 8 p. m. Wednesday at the Cumberland Fair Association grounds, for dairymen of the Potomac Valley section.

At each of the meetings, lantern slides depicting the ravages of the white pine blister rust will be shown by H. E. Yost, a representative of the State forestry department. He will explain methods of combating the disease, which is spreading in this State.

The jury recommended 30 years imprisonment. Sentence was not passed, pending argument of motions for new trial on Monday.

Dr. Hutchison in his testimony today said he shot Huneycutt because of what he described as derogatory terms applied to a member of the defendant's family.

Danville Authorities Ask Carolina Police Aid Search.

Danville, Va., April 22 (Spl.). County authorities today asked Caswell County, N. C., police to aid them in tracing three men in a roadster who are believed to have been responsible for robbery of two country postoffices and three country stores.

At Mustville the postoffice was robbed of $75 in stamps and coins after the safe had been smashed, according to Postmaster Henry Cousins. At Callands, Postmaster Lether Yates said the safe had been carried away and opened on Turkey Rock Mountain, yielding $20 in cash.

At both places general stores were plundered, and at Design the store of Charlie Lovelace was robbed of merchandise valued at $100.

The Postoffice Department in Washington has been asked to send an agent here.

Washington Society to Attend Gay Metropolitan Opera Fete

Much Interest Shown Here in Event to Keep Historic Institution Open; Fantasy to Be Presented Friday.

Washington society and music lovers have for years tried to find the means by which an opera could be supported in Washington as many feel that the Nation's Capital should boast an opera house, but that thought is still a dream which may materialize some day. Therefore, those who can go to New York to attend the Metropolitan Opera have learned to take a great interest to see that it is carried on year after year.

Last year for a short time it looked as though the doors of the Metropolitan would be closed due to lack of funds, until the idea of a ball was inaugurated which would be held in the opera house and the proceeds would go toward the fund. It was such a success that there will be another this year on Friday evening.

The spectacle to be presented is a sylvan fantasy entitled, "Le Roi S'Amuse a Fontainebleau," which will depict in sequences of pageantry a royal entertainment given by Louis XV of France in the Fontainebleau forest in celebration of the birthday of the Dauphine Marie-Josephe of Saxe, portrayed by Mrs. Allan A. Ryan, jr., of New York, who was formerly Miss Janet Newbold, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fleming Newbold, of Washington.

Louis of France will hold court in a moonlit forest, whither will come rulers and dignitaries of other nations. Each country will offer some musical contribution, with present-day opera stars in the roles of the musicians. Others in the French court are Miss Rossmond Pinchot, as the Marquise de Pompadour; Donna Cristina Torlonia as Duchess de Villeroy; Mr. Milton W. Holden, as Duc de Bourbon; Mrs. George J. Atwell, jr., as the Princess de Rohan-Guemenee, and many others.

The Austrian group will be headed by Mrs. Vincent Astor as Queen Marie Theresa and Prince Chlodwig Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst as Francis I. Others taking part in that group will be Mrs. Clendenin Ryan, Mrs. Dodge Sloane, Mrs. Pierpont Morgan Hamilton and Mrs. Harold E. Talbot.

Mrs. George F. Baker will take the part of her Majesty, Catherine Opalinska Leszczinska, Queen of Poland, and Mr. Ernest Schelling will portray Stanislas Boguslas Leszcinski, King of Poland. Others to take part in this group will be Mrs. Francis H. McAdoo, daughter-in-law of Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, of California; Countess di Zoppola and Mrs. Harold R. Talbot.

The Russian court will be headed by the Grand Duchess Marie as the Empress Elizabeth, and among her court will be Mrs. John R. Fell, daughter-in-law of Mrs. Ogden Mills, wife of the former Secretary of the Treasury; Prince and Princess Paul Chavchavadze, Princess Sachenka Troubetzkoy, and many other Russian nobles who are descendants of families belonging to the real court of Empress Elizabeth.

Mr. T. Suffern Tailer, of Newport, R. I., who is a brother of Mr. Lorillard Suffern Tailer, of the NRA, who has been making his home in Washington this winter, will assume the role of Bonnie Prince Charles, the young pretender to the throne. Many of the groups that will require Highland chieftains, huntsmen, soldiers and attendants of the various courts will be assumed by members of the Seventh Regiment.

Women who will not take part in the pageant may wear costumes of modern evening dress in shades of blue, rose, silver or gold, and the men may wear formal black and white evening dress, dominos or costumes, also within the prescribed colors. All of those taking part in the pageant will wear costumes of the period of Louis XV.

She Combats Skin Trouble—Wins the Fight

Beauty Specialist Has a Hollywood Secret, and It Works

By Ruth Anne Davis.

BEAUTY SALON is an adequate term for the little shop conducted by the sweet-voiced, mild-mannered lady who works long hours to counteract skin and scalp diseases. Beauty hospital would be more apt. For here, day after day, come those with falling hair, liver spots, or the more unsightly acne. And here, day after day, the proprietor works, battling poor circulation and sluggish skin gland activity.

Four years ago she visited Hollywood and heard about a treatment given many of the movie stars to keep their skin in first-class condition despite the strain of long hours and the smothering effect of heavy make-up. Trying to secure this cream mask for her own salon, she found it was not available. Its use was for the select few.

Last year, on another visit, she contacted the man who manufactures this product, and after swearing out papers before a notary public stating she would not sell it but would only use it in her salon, she was able to order some for her Washington shop.

Already many victims of acne, disfiguring pockmarks or those troubled with frequent skin blemishes are indebted to her. Not content merely with cleansing and refreshing the skin, she makes every effort to get at the root of the trouble and to eradicate it so the skin may be given a fresh start. If properly cared for it will continue to look as healthy and velvety as when she ends her treatment.

Speaking of wrinkles, which come too easily and remain too stubbornly, she declared they were nothing more than the result of wear and tear together with insufficient renovation because of slack circulation. "They are gallantly fought and warded off—completely in some cases—by such a penetrating cream mask!" she said.

Indoor Aerial.

It's a queer looking gadget that fastens onto the back of the radio set.

Any one can fasten it on and take it down. And once it's in place, it doesn't have to be fooled with. There are no moving parts, and no way for dust and grime to clog it up. On display now in a downtown shop. Price, $1.

White shoes, fancy colored shoes, kid gloves, and handbags are safe from soil if there's a jar of a new cleaner on hand.

The buyer for the handbag department in an F street store has an extraordinary appreciation for fine bags, and a deep interest in keeping them fresh and new looking. Recognizing the unusual value of the cleaner she did more than indorse it. She placed it out on the counter in the midst of her pocket books so customers could learn how to care for their new purchases.

Knit Wear Showing To Be Held Today

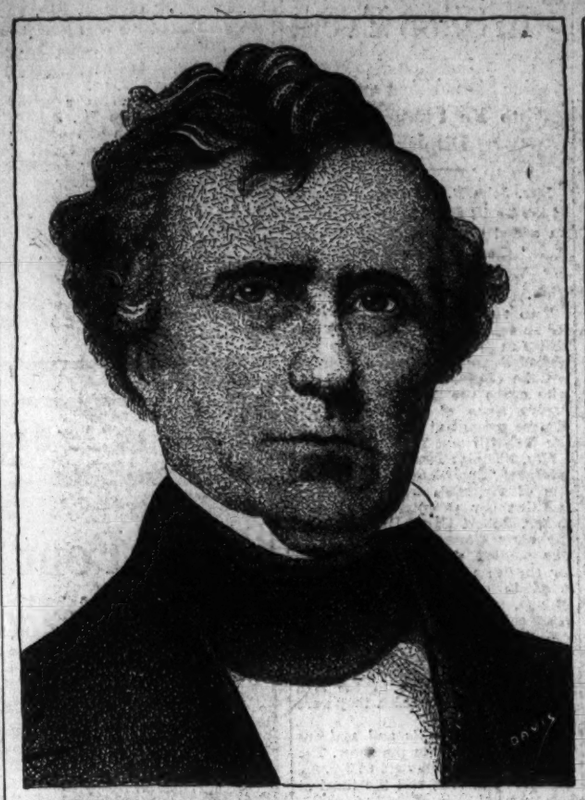
The daisy pattern blouse, one of the season's highlights, will be shown. In addition to knitted things, the style collection will contain crocheted costumes and crochet-trimmed sports clothes.

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Franklin Pierce—Jane Appleton



THEY HAD a college romance. She was the daughter of the president of Bowdon and had a whole collegeful of heroes to choose from. She took Franklin Pierce, a student, and father had to be convinced it wasn't just a passing fancy. But on their rise toward the White House things took a tragic turn. Two sons died and the third was killed when a train was derailed just before the inauguration. Her heroism during Presidential days was notable. She went through White House duties with calmness.

Pierce Started His Career As the "Baby" of the August Senate.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

IN the array of White House ladies there have been a number from New England. One of the most appealing is Jane Appleton Pierce, a frail flower of its stern hills and uncompromising virtues.

The soft light of sorrow hung about the White House days of Mrs. Pierce through the death of her son shortly after her husband was inaugurated. This did not prevent her meeting the social obligations of her office, but public observation was painful, and she shrank from it, always preferring the quiet of her New England home to the glitter of fashionable life in Washington.

Never was there a more devoted couple in official life than President and Mrs. Pierce. Even today, nearly a century later, it is still remembered and cherished in the annals of Washington.

Revolutionary Background.

Franklin Pierce had Revolutionary background, for his father, sturdy General Benjamin Pierce, was one of the handful of Concord and Lexington men in the world-famous charge across a village green. After this prelude to the Revolution, General Pierce never stopped fighting until final victory was won. The Revolution over, he took the responsibility of governing his native State, New Hampshire.

Naturally, the son of such a father, Franklin Pierce grew up in an atmosphere of national affairs. As Alice Longworth says in her notable book, "Crowded Hours," "I can hardly recollect a time when I was not aware of the existence of politics and politicians." Thus, Franklin Pierce, from his earliest boyhood knew such table talk. The wide-eyed boy listened and learned and settled his life's ambition to become a lawyer and then to get into government.

When 16 years he matriculated at Bowdoin College. He met there a boy, Nathaniel Hawthorne, who was to become his close and life-long friend. At Bowdoin, young Pierce stood high in scholarship and developed a natural faculty for friendship that was to stand him in good stead later in political life.

There were many thrills in national life to hold the attentiton of a young collegian at the time. Andrew Jackson was striding up and down the land gathering followers under his banner of the newer democracy. Pierce took his stand with Jackson. First his action led him to the State Legislature and later to the speaker's chair for the last two of his four years' term. By this time he was practicing law in his native village of Hillsborough and the good folk of the vicinity thought so well of General Pierce's boy they decided to send him, first to the national House of Representatives and then to the United States Senate, where he arrived as the youngest member of that august body.

And Then Romance.

Out in the world doing a man's part, yet romance had not passed him by. While at Bowdoin the frail beauty of Jane Appleton, daughter of the Rev. Jesse Appleton, president of the New England college, had attracted his attention.

Jane with all the world of college heroes to chose from returned young Pierce's affection. When he graduated in 1824 it was Jane's shy smile as he received his diploma that made it a real commencement day for him.

After a time he found the courage to ask President Appleton for his daughter's hand. As soon as the good doctor became convinced it was not a fleeting college romance he gave his consent.

With college mates as ushers and a bevy of Hillsborough girls as bridesmaids to flutter around Jane, Franklin Pierce and Jane Appleton were united in holy matrimony in 1834, ten years after his graduation, when political fame had begun to attach itself to his name.

When Franklin Pierce entered the Upper House of Congress as its baby member, he found such giants as Calhoun Clay and Webster thundering away. To a young man there was fascination in the very association.

Modest, handsome, well mannered, he was well liked, but few would have predicted the honors which were later to be his and which were to make him one of the few members of the Senate who have served as President.

She Was Another First Lady Pursued by a Tragic Destiny.

It was the Mexican War that brought Franklin Pierce into National limelight. The son of doughty old Gen. Pierce it is not strange he should enlist as a volunteer and then rise steadily until at its close he was brigadier general.

Meantime Jane Appleton had been building a home. Children came to her, three sons, but all seemed fated for an early death. One died in infancy, one at the age of 4, but Benjamin, aged 11, still lived as presidential days neared.

Tragedy Enters.

Franklin Pierce had been elected President and all was smiling in their lives one January morning in 1853, when the President-elect, his wife and son, Benjamin, left Boston on a train for their home in Concord. There was a crash, the coaches were derailed and flung down an embankment. Little Benjamin laughing and talking to his parents on the opposite seat, was instantly killed.

Their three sons gone, only their love for one another remained. How empty the Presidential honors before them must have seemed as they gazed at their little dead son.

The whole country sorrowed with the Pierces in their misfortune as they entered the White House. Mrs. Pierce, whose health had been failing steadily, had nerved herself for her White House social tasks, yet now they seemed insurmountable. But she did not falter and a writer of the times stated: "Mrs. Pierce never omitted attendance upon the public receptions of the President. She was punctually present also at her own Friday receptions, although at times suffering greatly. She presided, too, with the President at State dinners, as well as those of a more social character. She suppressed her inward grief before the public eye and overcame her debility in deference to what she believed to be her duty toward her distinguished husband's exalted position. Those who knew Mrs. Pierce well at this time eulogized her heroism."

Thus nerving herself for these ordeals she went through White House days with dignity and calmness. A few years followed at Andover, Mass. She died there on the 2d of December, 1863. They buried her beside her sons in the cemetery at Concord, N. H.

After she died Pierce was inconsolable. He survived her only by six years, treasuring every recollection and token of her. Thus ended one of the classic college romances in American history.

Queen Anne Furniture Curving, Light, Graceful

This story of furniture of the Queen Anne period is the third in a series of articles on English period furniture appearing on this page each Monday.

By Jo Ellen Maxon.

ALTHOUGH QUEEN ANNE furniture is thought of as being walnut chiefly, it was during this time mahogany began to be imported in large quantities to bring about a definite change in ideas of furniture.

Rooms in Queen Anne houses began to grow smaller, more livable than the vast banquet halls of the Elizabethan and William and Mary periods. The walls were still paneled. Sometimes the panels would vary in width. The mouldings around the top of the rooms, and the cornices had exquisite bits of carved design and tracery . . . much more restrained and more painstakingly done than ever before.

The furniture of this period follows curves—lovely, graceful lines. Stress was placed on the contour rather than on decoration. The chairs tables and settees had "cabriole" legs. They curved outward at the knee where the leg and chair frame join, then swept downward and inward to terminate in the "ball and claw" foot, which looks just as it sounds. The "pad" foot, with a round, flattened base, was also used.

The backs of the chairs were lower and a center "splat" was used, a beautifully carved strip of wood connecting the top of the chair with the seat down the center back.

The Windsor chair, a familiar piece in many of our homes, was introduced at this time.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Some Factors in Cancer.

Racial groups who live on a very low plane have very little cancer. The higher and more complicated the civilization and the more cancer there is. Poorly nourished peoples and races have but little cancer. Overweight, physically inactive people have a great deal of it.

Peoples who are compelled to live on very short rations at times and who for periods are hungry and half starved have almost no cancer. Those who eat three full meals a day and do not know the gnawings of hunger, are very subject to it. If a person has cancer he will increase his chances of cure by starving himself until he is well below normal weight.

These considerations, and his study of cancer all over the world has led Dr. Frederick Hoffman to investigate especially the relations of cancer to all kinds of food and eating habits and customs.

There are hundreds of speculative theories as to the cause of cancer and more than half of them relate to foods in one phase or another. Dr. Hoffman has investigated a fair cross-section or sampling of the theories that relate to foods and food habits. In his report he quotes the views, pro and con, of scientists who have investigated parts of the subject, and whose views he thinks worthy of consideration. In some cases he gives his opinion, though in the main he says there is not enough evidence to made it possible for him to decide.

BACHELOR—of ARTS

By John Erskine

The Story So Far.

In this latest novel of John Erskine's he writes about the scene he knows best—youth and love in college life, and the making of a man in a crashing world.

Alec, so nicknamed as a joke because his last name was Hamilton, was the son of a well-to-do manufacturer. The first half of Alec's sophomore year at Columbia saw the crash of his world. He had been just an average boy—a student without distinction, a scrub sportsman, and a failure as a glee club tenor. He had fallen in love at first sight, gotten into debt, been pampered by his family, and then discovered his father's financial ruin.

John Erskine's heroine is a lovable, red-headed student named Mimi, a modern, independent, straight-shooting youngster. Both students and at least one professor fell in love with her, and she fell for Alec. There was also Gladys, the blonde college widow, who had marked Alec for slaughter. Two other vital characters were Professor Barth and his young wife, who taught Alec something of life. The tragedy of Neal, a boy who had to die, also left its imprint on the boy's character.

Broke and faced with the possibility of having to leave college, Alec finally found a job in a restaurant. There he suffered the humiliation of waiting on the girl he loved, accompanied by Professor Wolsey, his strongest rival. In bitter rebellion he dashed back to the fraternity house and took on, for that evening, the job of a gigolo. Mimi learns of this escapade and throws him over. Alec is filled with grief when Mrs. Barth dies. He reaches his junior year.

Chapter XI.

That April, when Alec's sisters used part of his gift to visit him, he put them up at the King's Crown. Had he and Mimi been on good terms, he might have lodged the girls in Brooks Hall, as his mother would have preferred. She had an idea that the dean of Barnard would chaperone them. Now they must assume the risks of liberty.

When Laura and Beatrice announced their coming, his feelings were mixed. Of course, he wanted them, and all that, but they would need entertainment, and his days were crowded. He still thought of them as sisters—that is, very young. To him they seemed attractive, being his flesh and blood, but it didn't occur to him that they would mean romance to his friends.

Since Neal's funeral he and Weinstein had spent every spare hour on Barth, which meant on Bertha. That infant was accustomed to them by this time, and recognized their voices if not their faces, and slept her best when they attended her carriage along Morningside Drive. The best place, they had found by experiment, was the little semicircle in front of Carl Schurz's statue, just opposite the president's house. Carl Schurz stood on top of a wall, which made a convenient shelter for baby carriages. But if his sisters were parked at the Kings' Crown, and he and Weinstein were tied to the baby carriage in front of Carl Schurz, it would be rather a bore. Now if he could only talk to Mimi about it——

Girls Crave Excitement.

But the girls, when they arrived, suggested their own entertainment. He was surprised at their attractiveness. Really, he wouldn't mind taking them anywhere—and they had no end of energy! He watched them unpack their bags in their room at the King's Crown. Their affection and their happiness was the best thing that he'd looked on in ages.

"Where am I going to dance tonight?" asked Beatrice. "Is that saxophone player still in existence?"

Wally Blake, Alec remembered. "Yes, he's around. Want to meet him?"

"That's what I came for! Unless he's fascinating and makes me fall in love with him, this visit will be a flop!"

"I'll find out where he's playing. Maybe we can crash the party."

Beatrice protested, "I want to talk to him!"

Alec turned to Laura, the tall, older sister, with gray eyes and black hair.

"What's yours? Name anything you want!"

Alec made a mental review of his acquaintances. "Let's see"——

"Oh, I want to choose! Bring them on, parade them before me!"

"I'll see if Tom's free — you know, the fellow from Birmingham. And maybe Weinstein can come."

"Who?"

Letters Awfully Skimpy.

"My fellow nursemaid."

"Oh, good! You wrote mother about the professor's baby, you two rocking the cradle, but you didn't describe him — not even his name. Your letters are awfully skimpy, Alec!"

Beatrice, unpacked, was straightening her hair in the mirror.

"Where's my sax player? Take me to him!"

"Gosh! You must give me a minute to arrange it! . . . I tell you what, I'll show you two the grounds, all the high spots, and then you can sit down somewhere, maybe in the library, while I hunt up the fellows."

He showed them the ground floor of John Jay, and the Van Am statue, and the door through which you went if you cared to see the dean, and the entrance to the law school, where Jim was doubtless acquiring power that very minute. He asked if they'd like to look in the chapel, and they thought they should say yes, so they looked and found it satisfactory. Then they glanced at the first floor of Avery, which Beatrice said looked more like a university than anything she had yet seen.

Taking them into the main library by a back door, he explained the system of tunnels through which you could follow the steam pipes from building to building, and he introduced them to the Columbiana collection, where the university historians would try to remember him if he ever became famous. Then he persuaded Buildings and Grounds to send a boy with them to the dome, where Laura and Beatrice crawled around and held onto their hats. On the way down he indicated the location of the president's office, and left them breathless in the magazine room, where they might turn the pages of scholarly journals while he summoned his friends. Wally would be easy, he lived in John Jay, but Weinstein stayed with his folks somewhere on the East Side. He found the address in the directory in the secretary's office, and descended to the ground floor of the library for a telephone.

Asks For Weinstein.

"Mr. Weinstein has not come home yet," said a woman's voice. "He is expected for dinner."

"Well, look here, you tell him I've got my two sisters in town, and he must do me a favor—come on up to the Gold Rail. We'll be there at 7. Did you get the name? —Alec Hamilton. Tell him we'll save a chair for him. He must come!"

Hurying through the dormitory he met Tom.

"Help me out, old chap! I'm entertaining the sisters!"

Tom laughed. "Didn't we tell you about that needed profession—diverting the relatives?"

Stop joshing! The Gold Rail at 7—or come to the King's Crown at 6:30 and steer one of them down there."

"Well," said Tom, "for old time's sake!"

And Wally was free, but stubborn. Since Alec had never cultivated him before, the band leader with the resolute jaw could not understand this sudden affection. He said so, plainly.

"If you must know, it isn't my heart that's touched, Wally, but you made a hit with one of my sisters."

"Where'd she see me?"

"She hasn't."

"Well!" said Wally, delighted. "Hadn't I better quit while I'm a favorite?"

"Ah, come on!"

It amazed Alec that a granite-like character like Wally should soften at the mere report of admiration. "If a woman has set her heart on me," he mused, "and if, as it happens, I've nothing better to do"——

"Seven o'clock at the Gold Rail!"

"You're not dressing, I suppose."

"Thunder, no!"

He wondered whether Weinstein would put on his dinner coat. Perhaps Weinstein didn't have the measure of the Gold Rail.

"We're starting from the King's Crown at 6:30. There'll be quite a cavalcade."

"I'll join you there," said Wally, "so no one will have the advantage of me. This impression must be maintained."

Alec hurried back to the telephone in the library. This time it was the butler, who knew nothing about the earlier message. Alec repeated it.

"Very well, sir."

CAPITAL KITCHEN

Macaroni and Asparagus, Asparagus Buck, New Tasty Dishes.

By Susan Mills.

IF one could take a vote on the most popular vegetable this season asparagus would win by a wide margin. It is welcome on the table at least once a day, served either hot or cold, as a salad or a side dish.

It is always delicious served with melted butter, but a variation now and then gives asapargus fresh flavor and attractiveness.

Try it some day in casserole. The ingredients furnish almost all the nutritive elements of a complete meal. Another dish of asparagus and a beer sause will offer variety.

Baked Macaroni and Fresh Asparagus.

1 cup macaroni broken in inch pieces
4 tablespoons butter or margarine
3 tablespoons flour
2¼ cup milk
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon white pepper
¾ cup American cheese, grated
3 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
½ cup mayonnaise
2 cups cooked, fresh aspargus, cut in ¾-inch pieces.
¾ cup buttered bread crumbs

Cook macaroni in boiling, salted water until tender. Drain and rinse with cold water. Make a white sauce in double boiler with the shortening, flour, milk, salt and pepper. Add cheese and stir until melted.

Rmove from fire and slowly add Worcestershire sauce and mayonnaise, stirring constantly. Arrange alternate layers of macaroni and asparagus in buttered casserole. Cover with sauce and buttered bread crumbs on top. Bake in slow oven until brown. Serves eight.

What Today Means

"Taurus"

If April 23, is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 a. m. until 12 noon, from 1 to 3 p. m. and from 7 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 6 to 8 a. m., from 4 to 6 p. m. and from 11 p. m. until midnight.

In your social contacts on this date, you will display consideration if you avoid making any suggestion to a friend who may meet you that will involve their spending any money. You are not the type who would intentionally embarrass anyone, but it may be well to remember that in these days the state of a person's finances are an unknown quantity. Care should be used when you make proposals which will call for the expenditure of money if there is any uncertainty about some acquaintance's financial condition.

If a woman and born on April 23, you will display excellent judgment if you refrain from attempting to regulate the affairs of relatives and friends. It is very seldom that unsolicited suggestions, made regarding personal affairs, are appreciated, but are, as a matter of fact, generally resented. You have a habit of underrating your own ingenuity, which is a mistake. Little Boy Blue had to toot his horn to make the sheep and cows aware of his existence. In life, if you let the rest of humanity browse in the fields of finance, commerce, art or literature, and you refrain from doing some horn blowing on your own account, they will never realize you are awake and ready to take your place in the front ranks.

The child born on April 23 must be encouraged to take an active interest in outdoor sports and indoor exercises. This child's physical development requires that its muscles be used, so any tendency it may display to loll around the house continuously should be discouraged. It must have a certain amount of daily activity.

Women born on April 23 will display good common sense and calmness if ever put to the test in an emergency, as they have the happy faculty of being able to arise to any unusual occasion. You must guard against indulging in moody introspections. Divert your mind by reading amusing stories or going to a good play, whenever you feel you are getting the "pip" or "down in the mouth."

The man born on April 23, like the woman born on this date, must avoid allowing himself to become depressed by indulging in gloomy thoughts. You can learn to "snap" out of it very quickly by having your thoughts turn to pleasant subjects. Indulge in amusements.

People born on April 23 will be wise if they avoid being reticent, and they should, even if it is necessary for them to force themselves to do so, take an active interest in social activities.

Did Bacon Write Hamlet? Another Expert Says No

SO FAR AS Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Friedman, above, has been able to discover, William Shakespeare wrote his works himself—contrary to the claims of the Sir Francis Bacon protagonists. She's an authority on cipheer.

Mrs. Elizabeth Friedman, a Whizz at Ciphers, Failed to Find Proof the Essayist Was Shakespeare's Ghost Writer.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

THREE HUNDRED and seventy years ago today William Shakespeare was born. For at least half of those 370 years people have been trying to learn whether he actually wrote the plays and sonnets that bear his name or whether Francis Bacon was the real author of the Shakespearean works.

In recent years the Baconians have jubilantly set forth the Bacon cypher as certain proof hidden messages by Bacon are concealed in the Shakespeare manuscripts.

Riddled Theory.

But their theory has been pretty thoroughly riddled by a Washington woman, Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Friedman, cryptanalyst, who has taken the same cyphers, applied them to the same manuscripts and failed to find a single hidden message.

Incidentally, Mrs. Friedman's study of the Bacon cypher led to her becoming engaged in code work for the Government. She is chief of the cryptanalytic section of the U. S. Coast Guard.

"Undoubtedly Bacon used a cypher in his writings as secretary to the Ambassador of France," she said discussing the Bacon-Shakespeare riddle. "I have applied that cypher to the Shakespeare manuscripts and have been unable to find anything that would make me think Bacon wrote them."

Mrs. Friedman believes those who claim they found hidden messages through the cypher were perfectly sincere in their claims.

"I feel sure they were self deluded," she said. "They found those messages because they were looking for them, because they hoped to find them."

A Printing Custom.

With her knowledge as cryptanalyst, Mrs. Friedman scientifically examined the systems used by the Baconians in applying the cypher. She learned the same cypher could be put in any book ever written providing the manuscript was marked before it reached the printer.

"Bacon's cypher consisted of five plain text letters for every cypher letter," she said. "At the time he wrote two forms of letters, plain and fancy, were used indiscriminately in manuscripts. The Elizabethans thought this improved their appearance. Bacon, by consciously arranging the large, fancy letters, used his cypher. The same thing could be done today, if we cared for a jumble of large and small letters in our books."

Shakespeare's manuscripts were printed with the same heterogeneous lettering as Francis Bacon's known works, but that was in keeping with Elizabeth printing customs, and not with the idea of hiding secret messages, believes Mrs. Friedman.

"Since the cypher itself is no secret, the messages would also be easily discerned if they really existed," she asserted. "I, myself do not care whether Bacon or whether Shakespeare wrote 'Hamlet', 'The Merchant of Venice', and all the rest of them. But I certainly have never seen anything that would make me think Bacon wrote them."

Interested in College.

It was while she was majoring in English at Wooster College, Ohio, Mrs. Friedman became interested in the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy. She was especially interested in the Bacon cypher solved by Ignatius Donnelly about 1888. Although Donnelly solved it, he failed to apply it successfully to Shakespeare's works.

As soon as she had finished school at Wooster, Mrs. Friedman went to Illinois to work with Elizabeth Wells Gallup, who had found many hidden messages in Shakespeare's manuscripts by using the Bacon cipher.

Mrs. Friedman, however, could not find any of those messages when she applied the cipher in a scientific manner. In vain she studied the original manuscripts and photographs of original manuscripts in the Newberry Library, Chicago. Although she greatly admires Mrs. Gallup, she is certain her application of the cipher was not entirely scientific.

"When other ciphers are applied by persons who understand them the same results are obtained by all," said Mrs. Friedman. "Since all the Baconians come forth with different results when they apply the cipher, it clearly shows there is something wrong somewhere."

It was a natural step to go from literary ciphers to military ones, Mrs. Friedman found. Ever since she exhausted the possibilities of the Bacon cipher, she has been doing cryptanalytic work for the Government. Her husband is Maj. Friedman of the Signal Corps.

Good Nurses Find Glamour, Believes Editor

Says It Wears Thin Sometimes, But Devotion Is Intact.

Tall, dark and earnest, Miss Mary Roberts, who is in Washington to attend the Nurses' Biennial Convention this week, made this statement at the Mayflower yesterday. Miss Roberts, for many years editor of the American Journal of Nursing, spoke quietly but forcefully, with an enthusiasm both convincing and contagious.

"There are times when the glamour wears a bit thin," she continued, "but no matter how great the stress and strain is, the women who devote their lives to nursing retain respect and devotion for the cause they represent.

"And in occasions of great trial the good nurse puts her whole being into her task. And even those of us who are not in the orthodox sense religious are apt to pray that we may not make the least little error that will cause us to fall in our duty."

Not Sentimental.

Miss Roberts stressed the fact that the romance and glamour of nursing are not based upon sentimentality, but upon a desire to serve combined with knowledge and specific skill needed for the care of the sick.

"Nursing has been tried by the fire of the depression and will emerge better for the trial," she said. "Today there is a resurgence of the spirit of nursing, combined with a desire to increase the scope of service and to raise the standards of the profession.

"Emphasis is now placed both upon the perquisites of a good nurse, such as good health, and a well-trained mind, and also upon the professional training, both manual and the psychological."

Asserting there is no such thing as a "born nurse," Miss Roberts pointed out that while some persons undoubtedly have the necessary intuition, and sympathy for nursing, a knowledge of psychology and the social sciences are needed. Only by such knowledge, she said, could nurses create happy, healthy environment for their patients.

Peculiar Requirements.

"This knowledge of the social and mental sciences is just as important as the knowledge of physical sciences and technique of nursing," she explained. "For the nurse creates the atmosphere in which her patient lives. For this, and many other reasons, her work, while subordinate to that of the medical profession, has its peculiar requirements which are different from those of any other profession."

A realization of the fact that each patient is a distinct individual and that certain adjustments must be made to the temperament of each person is one of the most important considerations in nursing, Miss Roberts believes.

"And while our work is as old as the human race, its growth as a science of human betterment is only beginning," she said. "We are progressing both on the educational and service fronts, and we are beginning to find a way in which all the unnursed patients can receive the skilled care necessary. I think this is one of the things we will learn from the depression.

And Even Thou Art Queer.

By Katherine Smith.

All the world—but thee and me,
And even thou—it's strangely said,
For I would rather have, you see,
A silly than a level head.

So, if you wisely think I'm mad
It's complimentary, and now
Repeat, "The world is queer," but add,
"Thank God, and even I and thou . . ."

A Fortune Came to a Teacher Out of the Blue; Now She Spends Her Time Circling the World

THE GODS NOT only smiled on her, they beamed. For she is Mrs. Belle Carrington, who had the Cinderella-like experience of inheriting a fortune overnight. And then what did she do—all the things she'd wanted to while she was teaching school out in the Middlewest. She traveled, bought a villa in the south of France and conducted her life independently.

Travel Always Been Ambition

She Has Achieved This Now; Also Much Independence.

It's a question to stir the imagination. Especially in these days.

Mrs. Belle Colby Carrington, to whom this happened while she was teaching school in the Middle West, chose three things — travel, the building of a dream home in France, and investment.

Following her husband's death, Mrs. Carrington became a school teacher. Ten years ago, on the death of an uncle, she received her bequest.

Although a Cinderella of real life, Mrs. Carrington, who is now visiting Washington, refused to admit it, and definitely doesn't care to discuss finances.

"I always knew I'd have a lot of money some day—uncle always said he'd leave it to me," she protested. "Of course, none of my friends knew this and naturally they were surprised and excited over my good fortune.

"The only surprise to me was a painful one, for my uncle was killed suddenly in an automobile accident."

Around the World.

Mrs. Carrington spends six months of the year in one part of the world and the other six months elsewhere. In the first years of her good fortune, gratifying her long desire for travel, Mrs. Carrington made several trips around the world. There are still, perhaps, six or eight countries she hasn't visited and some of these will be chalked off the list after a cruise down the Mediterranean and up the Black Sea to Georgia. She plans to embark from New York about June.

Although Mrs. Carrington lives at Evian-les-Bains in France — where the architects refused to build special baths for her servants when constructing her house, she is in no sense an expatriate. Quite the contrary. She is keenly interested in everything in her native land and extremely loyal to it.

When visiting in New York this year, after an absence of several seasons, she was surprised and gratified at the change in the demeanor of the people generally from predepression days.

"They seemed so much more courteous," she said. "There was less of that wild, rude rushing and pushing on the streets and in the elevated and subway. The depression seems to have sobered people generally and made them more thoughtful and kindly.

Dirt Unnecessary.

Mrs. Carrington is interested in the arts and has been a sojourner at more than one art colony, but she has reached the conclusion "artists don't need to go off to some inconvenient and dirty place to live in order to produce real art." She, herself, has had an elaborately designed book privately printed. It contains the fascinating legend, still told in the mountains of Russian Georgia, of a prince's search for the secret of everlasting life and his finding of beauty and the logical reason for death. This legend has only been printed twice before—once in the Russian and once in French. It has been handed down by word of mouth all over the Caucasus.

"Your money has brought you marvelous travels, experiences that were beautiful, and so much independence, hasn't it?" suggested her interviewer.

"Oh, yes. Of course, I always thrilled at the thought of travel—that was the first thing I wanted to do when I was free to go," she replied. "And I have seen many things and had rich experiences. I've had independence, too, of course," she finished, more slowly.

"Money always means independence, doesn't it? Isn't this business of being independent a wonderful feeling?" persisted her interviewer.

"Oh, yes," answered Mrs. Carrington, "but you know, I sometimes wonder if one can't have too much independence."

Is the answer—all that glitters is not the gold standard?

James Smithson Enigma Explored by Biographer

A LIFE THAT contains a mystery is a challenge to any woman, for women are the natural born detectives of the world, believes Louise Wallace Hackney, biographer of James Smithson, the man of mystery who founded the Smithsonian Institution. Miss Hackney was in Washington Saturday as guest speaker at the author's breakfast given by the League of American Pen Women.

"The life of James Smithson fascinates me," she said, "because it is shrouded in mystery. For instance, just why he left his fortune to America, a country he had never visited, is a problem that has never been explained. I, like most women, have an insatiable curiosity; I wanted to find the answers to all questions that have been asked about James Smithson."

This desire led Miss Hackney to England and Europe to search for every fact about him, and to sift these facts until she arrived at satisfactory solutions for the mysteries of his life.

"I think I discovered everything that can be found out about him," she continued. "I spent three years doing research work and writing my biographical novel, 'Wing of Fame.' I think it is highly improbable that more facts of his life will ever be uncovered."

She pointed out, however, that in the writing of her book, she had added many incidents to make the book more interesting.

"'Wing of Fame,' is, after all, a novel with a biological framework," she asserted. "I have used every fact that I could discover in regard to James Smithson, but I have supplied some details. The book, therefore, is not strictly a biography, but I think it is as nearly so as any readable one that can be written about James Smithson."

Miss Hackney is the only person who has attempted to solve the riddle of this forgotten man, whose personal records were lost by fire. Very little has been known of him except that after his father's death the family acknowledged him as the illegitimate son of the Duke of Northumberland.

One explanation for his peculiar behavior in leaving his entire fortune to America lies in the fact that he was bitter over his family's tardy recognition and wished to dispose of his wealth so that it would never pass into the possession of any of his relatives.

"Wing of Fame," which was published recently, is indorsed by the Smithsonian Institution and highly recommended by critics.

Before its publication Miss Hackney had already established herself in the literary world by her travel books. She is known also in the field of art because of her books on Chinese art, a subject in which she ranks as an authority.

He Out-Publicities Shaw

TODAY is the anniversary of the birth of the only dramatist who enjoys world-wide acclaim and persistent publicity—his nearest rival in that respect being George Bernard Shaw.

Both are British, but of the two, William Shakespeare has an undated agelessness and warm humanness in his work that, like the tortoise of Aesop's fables, will undoubtedly continue to outstrip any bounding hares of brilliant mentality even though they may have the wittiness of Shaw.

• • • •

Washington is duly honoring Shakespeare with two programs to be given at the little theater in the Folger Shakespeare Memorial Library and at Wilson Teachers College.

• • • •

Everyone who has stepped into the shrine of the Folger Library, that gem of reproduction, yearns to see a play done there in the old style.

So far they have only given period music there. And that is what they are doing today at 4:30 and 8:30 p. m. The music will be the setting for some readings by Edith Wynne Matthison of passages from "The Merchant of Venice" and "As You Like It."

• • • •

This small, colorful hall holds only about 200 people. On previous Shakespeare celebration dates it has been the subject of much discussion that many invitations to people out of town have not been answered. So, of the few seats, there were gaping vacancies when hundreds of Washingtonians who would have enjoyed the programs and appreciated the opportunity to be present, were not even asked.

This year, a waiting list yards long has been made up and probably the theater will be filled to the last Elizabethan beam this afternoon and evening.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen

The American foils queen of this season and German Olympics champion, Helene Mayer, now representing California, is making a thorough sweep of American titles before she goes back to fence for Germany in the next Olympics.

Winning the first women's national outdoor foils championship last year at the World's Fair, the Southern California championship this spring, and finally, in New York, taking the national title, she has made an assured progress.

She held the center of the stage at the nationals, not only by her clean-cut technique and smooth control, but with some of the pageantry that seems properly to belong to foils play.

Whether she swept across the room, wrapped in her regal red cape with its heavy gold braid, or inclined her tall, white-frocked figure in a stiff, somewhat military bow, Helene Mayer held the eyes and the applause of the gallery.

She has been fencing in California, while she finished her studies at Scripps College. Next year she plans to take graduate work at an Eastern university. But wherever she is and whatever she does, there will be fencing in the present and the Olympics as a goal.

Bride's Musical Composition Becomes Nationally Popular

ONE OF THE unusual numbers presented recently at the author's breakfast, which opened the biennial convention for the League of American Pen Women, was the musical setting for "The Lord's Prayer," composed and played by Josephine Forsyth and sung by Harlan Randall.

This composition, which has been winning National acclaim since its publication in 1929, was recently sung by a chorus of 500 in the Rose Bowl in California at the Easter sunrise service.

During 1933 it was chosen by the music committee of A Century of Progress as one of the official numbers and was broadcast throughout the grounds each Sunday during the fair.

It will be repeated as the invocation at the annual breakfast of the Rubinstein Club held at the Waldorf-Astoria this year on May 5. Later in May it is scheduled for presentation as one of the two competitive numbers for choruses in Hamilton, Ontario.

Formerly nationally known on the stage and in concert, Miss Forsyth relinquished her stage career when she married Philip Andrew Myers, of Cleveland.

The setting for the Lord's Prayer, written at the time of her marriage and dedicated to her husband, was never intended for public presentation. A friend showed it to a publisher, however, who immediately accepted it for publication. Subsequently, being arranged for both male and female chorus, it achieved Nation-wide attention.

Millions of people have heard this composition, for it was chosen by the American Legion convention last fall and it has been sung by hundreds of church choirs, as well as by numerous choral and glee clubs from the stage and over the radio.

What Can We Be Coming To? Gloves in Orange and Yellow

PARIS, APRIL 22 (AP).—Gloves are more vital to chic this spring than they have been in the last decade.

Suede, antelope, capeskin and pigskin no longer hold all the spotlight. Cotton, pique, necktie silk, flowered crepe and rich satins are crowding into the glare, and such colors as orange, light green and yellow are giving the fashionables something to think about.

Chanut has used both new fabrics and colors to make some of the smartest gloves Paris has seen. Most of them are designed to match a jabot or cravat such as the old-time dandies used to wear. Necktie silk—navy dotted with white and brown splashed with green—fashions jaunty gauntlet gloves worn with ascot cravats. Black and white, and red and white checked taffeta gloves have matching scarfs finished with a great big bow worn on one side of the throat.

Washable gloves in light effects have been evolved by the same designer to give an airy note to summer costumes. White piques splashed with little multicolored field flowers, white linens dotted with black or brown figures and tussors printed in microscopic patterns are all fashioned in gauntlet shape to be worn with matching scarfs.

A vogue for color marks a number of new soft suedes the designer has launched for formal afternoon wear. Orange, pale blue, mist gray, pale pink and light green appear in the designs which extend almost to the elbow.

Women Plan Garden Group Session Here

Meet April 30 for Final Arrangements; Parley Set May 1-2-3.

Preparations for the convention of the Women's National Farm and Garden Association, of which Mrs. Henry Ford is president, will be completed at the annual meeting of the district division at the Dodge Hotel on Monday, April 30. The National association will meet at the same place on May 1, 2 and 3.

The association has as one purpose the etsablishment of city markets and wayside stands which bring the membership together as producer and consumer. Mrs. Frederick L. Lewton is chairman of marketing for the National Capital division and is assisted by Dr. Edith Allen, who will be in charge of a program on the evening of May 1 and will show motion pictures of women's markets in various parts of the country.

Allied with marketing is the committee on exhibits, of which Miss Margaret Klein is district chairman. The association arranges classes in handicraft for pleasure and profit and tries to preserve handicraft types and arranges exhibits at county fairs. An exhibit of products of members will be held in the garden house of the hotel.

The social program includes luncheons, a dinner at which Mme. Marie Michelet, of Norway, vice president of the Associated Country Women of the World, will be a guest; a trip through Virginia and West Virginia, a tea at the Governor's mansion at Annapolis, and sightseeing in the District.

Mrs. Arthur Keith, chairman of membership, and Mrs. Charles Hamlin, vice chairman, are inviting those interested in the objectives of the association to communicate with them.

Flight to Lithuania To Be Tried Again

Chicago, April 22 (AP).—Christened "Lituanica Second," a Lockheed-Vega monoplane today was dedicated to a renewed attempt for a nonstop flight from America to Lithuania.

A similar attempt last year started from New York ended in disaster about 400 miles from its goal when the plane, "Lithuania," crashed in a forest near Soldin, Germany. Capt. Stephen Darius and Stanley Girenas were killed.

Piloting the new plane will be Lithuanian-born William R. James. Present plans for the flight call for its start here probably late in July.

Radio Waves and Ripples

IF anyone wants to know what happened to WJSV's plans for broadcasting play-by-play accounts of Washington's ball playing in Philadelphia last week, or why WMAL failed to come through with its usual post-game resume, he should write a letter to R. B. White, president of Western Union.

Ball broadcasting in any form from New York, Philadelphia and Washington is anathema to three gentlemen by the name of Ruppert, Shibe and Griffith. Know any of them? Mr. Ruppert, Mr. Shibe and Mr. Griffith belong to that school of thought which holds radio a menace to gate receipts at an athletic event.

But Mr. White runs a play-by-play ticker service just for people like WJSV and WMAL. He runs it from Mr. Ruppert's, Mr. Shibe's and Mr. Griffith's places of business, but not to broadcasters. WJSV thought it would be all right to take what Mr. White's ticker tapped out in the offices of the Alexandria Gazette. But Mr. White said no. And he wouldn't send WMAL the dope for its resume, either.

We think if Mr. White had let WJSV and WMAL know what was happening in Mr. Shibe's ball park, Mr. Shibe would have turned all that nice business the newspaper boys are doing with the telegraph company over to Postal. If you want to be sure about it, perhaps you had better write Mr. White that letter.

Just when we were beginning to wonder if Arthur Godfrey's indifference to time in connection with his Sundialing on WJSV might not get him into difficulties with his new bosses similar to those he had with the N. B. C. minds, some one whispered that Mr. Godfrey has been up in New York auditioning a very worthwhile commercial with Columbia.

It was while Godfrey was broadcasting a description of the Cherry Blossom Festival parade that we dropped into a drug store on Fourteenth street for a sandwich and got, incidentally, our first demonstration of the redhead's microphone charm.

It was one of those stores where the customers are on sufficiently good terms with the proprietor to find fault with his selection of radio programs. Station after station was turned off the air until WJSV was reached way over at the end of the dial. Godfrey was still carrying on in his best Tony Wons-Ben Bernie-Amos and Andy manner when we left 15 minutes later and no complaints.

The Washington Post's daily salute to the ladies has been separated from WJSV's Woman's Hour and has been given a spot of its own. This week it's 11:15.

Today Ray C. B. Brown comes up to tell more about what makes a music critic and why.

Whitecaps.

Memorial Planned For Rose L. Hardy

A triple memorial to Miss Rose Lees Hardy, late director of primary instruction in District schools, is being planned by school officials, headed by Robert L. Haycock, assistant superintendent.

The three features of the memorial are a tablet to be placed in the Rose Lees Hardy School; a rose garden in the grounds of the school, and an endowment fund for lecturers to address Washington school teachers each year.

Detailed announcement of the memorial will be made at the Hardy School on May 25, at a ceremony in tribute to the teacher's memory. Servir.g with Mr. Haycock on the memorial committee are Miss Ida M. Lind, who succeeded Miss Hardy; Miss Louise Fendy, and Miss Mae T. Bradshaw.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Blackie Hears the Rising Bell

The next morning by the time it was light, Hee-Haw woke up, and when a donkey wakes up, so does everybody else that happens to be in about a mile of him. He said "Hee-haw, hee haw so loud that all the woods-folks in the wagon woke up with a jump, and Blackie nearly broke his neck getting out of the wagon before he was awake good. That "hee-haw" noise that the donkey made caused him to remember that night when he ran over Uncle Joe's wheelbarrow, and that other donkey had hollered "hee-haw" so loud that he woke up Uncle Joe, who got his gun and came mighty near killing Blackie.

By the time Blackie struck the ground, he woke up good, and then Billie Possum came crawling out, and was laughing so hard that it made Blackie awfully mad. "You may laugh as much as you want to, you grinning Jake; but if a donkey's braying had come as near getting your skin nailed on Uncle Joe's door as it did mine, you wouldn't see so much to laugh about," said Blackie. But Billie laughed some more, anyway, while he was going down to the spring to wash his face.

Then Jocko Monkey came out of the wagon, bringing Mr. Man's new gun, and he told Blackie that if he and Dr. Coon would make a fire and put on some bread and bacon, he would go out into the woods and kill a few rabbits. So Jocko got Billie Possum to run about in the grass like a dog, and scare up the rabbits. It wasn't long before they came back with four big rabbits, and they soon had them skinned and salted away with the turkeys and other meat in the wagon. By that time breakfast was ready, and they all sat down to the sort of breakfast that Mr. Man had expected to have. And now here comes Jay Bird, who stayed behind, last night, to see what Mr. Man would do when he woke up and didn't find any donkey.

"Well, Jay Bird, tell us all about it," said Blackie, as he reached for another piece of bacon, while Jocko was fixing a place for Joy Bird. "The funny part of it is that Mr. Man has no idea who got his donkey," said Jay Bird. "When he woke up he stretched his legs, picked up his pipe that had dropped from his mouth while he was asleep, and then said: "Well, Hee-Haw, let's be going!" When he didn't get any answer from his donkey, he opened his eyes wider to see what was the matter with Hee-Haw. Matter enough; there was no Hee-Haw there."

20 Millions District Bill Slated to Win

Chairmen of Congress Committees Sight Approval.

Joint Public Hearing Will Take Place Tomorrow.

Favorable action on the $20,000,000 District public works bill will follow a joint public hearing by the House and Senate District committees at 10 a. m. tomorrow, chairmen of the committees predicted yesterday.

The hearing is to be held in the Senate District Committee room in the Capitol and the District Commissioners, Frederic A. Delano or other representatives of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and Secretary of the Interior Ickes or a representative from the Public Works Administration are expected to attend. Others who desire also will be heard, it was announced.

The program of public works intended for completion with the funds authorized by the pending bills includes construction of a new prison or inclosure at Lorton, Va.; an addition to Gallinger Hospital, construction of a tuberculosis hospital, construction of a sewage disposal plant, new schools and possibly park purchases or improvements.

As introduced, the bill provides for not more than $2,000,000 for public parks, but officials of the Park Commission object that this, together with provisions for repayment of 70 per cent of the amount advanced by PWA, may upset the future development of the parks as provided in the Capper-Cramton act.

This objection is sufficient, it is believed, to cause the park provisions to be stricken from the measure. Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, who introduced the bill, said he did not wish to upset the Cramton act provisions and the bill would be amended so that the danger foreseen by park officials would be removed

Although there seemed to be widespread approval of the measure in both House and Senate, Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), of New Jersey, chairman of the House District Committee, and members of her committee, as well as Senator King and members of his committee, see some danger to its chances of passage because of the prospective adjournment of Congress.

German Farmers Told To Forget Mortggaes

Munich, Germany, April 22 (AP). Prussian farmers were told by their Nazi minister of agriculture today to forget about credit and mortgages, the problems emphasized "by the liberalistic-capitalistic system."

The minister, Walter Daare, asserted that emphasis on credit and trading under the old regime was responsible for Germany's past agricultural troubles. He was heard by 2,000 farmers, assembled in the former Royal Palace.

Belgrade University Election Ends in Riot

Belgrade, April 22 (AP).—An attempt to hold the regular Belgrade University election today resulted in a riot, in which police used their clubs. Several persons, including two girls, were injured.

Students captured three detectives, barricaded themselves in a building, and threatened to throw the officers off a balcony if police forced an entrance. Finally, the rector and the students marched out in a body and dispersed.

Charles Dar, PWAP artist, working on lobby decorations at Roosevelt High School, which probably will be left unfinished when the Public Works of Art Project ends on April 28.

Headless Statues, Murals Half-Done Will Mark Passing of PWAP.

When PWAP, 5-month-old infant of the Civil Works Administration, is dropped on its head April 28, some 1,700 artists from one coast to the other are going to put down their paints, brushes, chisels and etching needles and leave enough unfinished works to fill a couple of Louvres.

In Washington 40 artists and sculptors, wards of Public Works of Art project have been feverishly rushing their work in an attempt to finish before the deadline. Some will and some will not. Those who do not will be survived by headless statues, half-done murals and unborn frescoes.

Even Mickey Mouse is a victim of orders to wipe out the pay roll when Saturday of this week comes around. With the help of Walt Disney, Mickey's creator, one of the Civil Works artists executed designs for two stained-glass windows to be installed in the small mammal house. Mickey and Minnie were to be the central motif. But that's out now. Klir Beck, the artist, will be out himself soon.

All Is So Uncertain.

If, by some miracle, the windows are made, they will be transferred from the mammal house to the rodent house. That's if the Zoo ever gets a rodent house as planned. Everything is so uncertain.

Several artists who were let out last Thursday in the program's scaling-down process, are continuing without pay, even furnishing their own materials, in order to finish what they started out to do.

One is Catherine Wernicke, whose decorations have brightened Children's Hospital. The hospital wants her to paint a corridor. She is off the pay roll, but still on the job.

Philip Bell had just finished the design for a mural in McKinley High School's library when he was let out last week. A four-month task confronts him. He remains on, fortified by no salary.

The ax fell on Russell Parr the same day. He was doing a series of murals at the Industrial School for Boys. In another year, if he stays on, he may have the huge job finished.

"Recovery" Lacks Bird.

Stewart Williams has a wife and two children to support, so when he was dismissed April 12, he could not stay with "Recovery," a sculpture of two riveters hard at work beneath the outstretched wings of a Blue Eagle. It was almost done, too, with only the bird lacking.

About a score of other artists who are still drawing weekly salaries of $23 to $38.25, will be lopped off before their murals, batiks, frescoes, sculptured portraits, panels and easel paintings are finished.

Margaret Austin will be caught with her frescoes done on wet plaster at Eastern High School. Rather, undone on wet plaster. In the auditorium, Fritz Fuglister has completed one intempera painting, but won't get through with the second in time.

Bird Maps Unfinished.

Elie Cheverlange, well-known nature painter, who once would have laughed at a $38 weekly wage, has done two bird distribution maps at the Zoo, but six more remain in the series. Given three more weeks, Charles Darby could finish his lobby decorations at Roosevelt High.

Dan Rhodes, working on seven murals in the Navy Building, needs two months or more. Virginia Wood might wind up her staircase fresco at McKinley High in three weeks.

Henry Hudson, colored, recently started a mural which requires about four months work. In this connection, the local PWA committee pointed out that no more than 30 of the 137 requisitions for paintings sent in by colored schools here can be filled.

Jane McKenzie, doing a series of batiks designed by Hugh Collins, has finished one set, but has five more to go. Richard Sargent is planning to do several murals for the public-speaking room at Western High. The school will furnish materials, but no provision is made for Sargent's compensation.

Winter's Work Lost.

For months Stephen Walker has been sculpting portraits of Zoo animals in wax and clay. They were to be cast in bronze, but funds ran short and Walker will be dropped soon with the others. Meanwhile the figurines which have been praised highly, will deteriorate, and a winter's work will go for naught.

Much of the outstanding work, it will be noticed, is in schools. The local school system was skeptical about the project and entered only after much controversy. Now that PWAP is about to be exterminated, orders and requisitions are pouring in by hundreds.

Officers Draft Nurses' Aims In Convention

Legislative and Business Activities Outlined on Eve of Gathering.

Sessions, Starting Today, Will Find 7,000 in Attendance.

Mapping a course of legislative and business activity in executive meetings here, officers and directors of the Nation's three largest nursing associations yesterday cleared the way for the opening session of the National biennial nursing convention, which tonight will see 7,000 delegates assembled in Washington Auditorium.

Early arriving members of the convention's principal component organizations—the American Nurses Association, the National League of Nursing Education and the National Organization for Public Health Nursing—and three smaller groups—Joint Vocational Service, Student Nurses and the Midwest Placement Bureau—were occupied yesterday with the business of registering and making preparation for five days of joint convention sessions and separate meetings of their associations.

Unknown Soldier Honored.

Many of them joined their leaders in a pilgrimage to Arlington National Cemetery, where the officers placed a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Heading the delegation were Elnora E. Thomson, president of the American Nurses Association; Jane Van de Verde, first vice president; Sophie C. Nelson, president of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing; Winifred Rand, first vice president; Effie J. Taylor, president of the National League of Nursing Education, and Nellie X. Hawkinson, first vice president.

Headquarters for the convention have been established at Washington Auditorium, where sessions will be held and exhibits of the most modern nursing equipment shown.

Component associations have set up headquarters of their own—the American Nurses Association, in the Mayflower Hotel, the National League of Nursing Education, in the Willard, and the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, in the Washington.

Guests of Nurses Here.

The convention comes to Washington as the guest of the Graduate Nurses Association of the District of Columbia, the Maryand State Nurses Association and the Graduate Nurses Association of Virginia. It will be welcomed at the opening joint session tonight by J. Beatrice Bowman, president of the District association.

Addresses will be given by the presidents of the principal participating organizations and Bishop James E. Freeman will pronounce the invocation. The Marine Band, under the direction of Capt. Taylor Branson, will present a program of music.

In the main the convening delegates will devote themselves to a consideration of measures for adaptation of their profession to changing social and economic conditions. "The Changing Order and the Profession of Nursing" will be its keynote.

One of the high points of tonight's session will be the award of the Walter Burns Saunders Memorial Medal for outstanding service during the last two years to a yet unannounced member of the profession. Dr. Nathaniel W. Faxon, president of the American Hospital Association, will make the award.

An address by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, "What Does the Public Expect from Nursing?" will feature tomorrow morning's joint session of the convention at which President Taylor, of the National League of Nursing Education, will preside. C. Rufus Rorem, associate for medical service of the Julius Rosenwald Fund, Chicago, will give the other address, "What Can the Public Do to Insure Good Nursing Service?"

Throughout the convention's five days here, the three organizations, when not in joint session, will assemble in separate conventions or participate in the elaborate program of entertainment that has been arranged for them by the local convention committee headed by Ida F. Butler, chairman; Annabelle Peterson, vice chairman; Sarah B. Corson, second vice chairman, and Mrs. Isabelle W. Baker, executive secretary.

Convention Speakers.

A third joint session of the convention will be held tomorrow night with President Nelson, of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, presiding, and David Cushman Coyle, of Washington, and Aubrey Williams, assistant administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, giving the principal addresses.

The full convention will meet again Wednesday morning to hear Bess Goodykoontz, assistant commissioner of education, and Annie W. Goodrich, dean of the Yale School of Nursing. Thursday morning's joint session will be addressed by Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), New York.

Thursday afternoon the convention will dedicate a memorial to Jane A. Delano and the 296 nurses who died in the World War, a monument located in the Red Cross garden, between the two Red Cross buildings. The memorial is the work of Dr. R. Tait McKenzie, sculptor, and a special delegation of the National Organization of American Nurses, a war nurse group, will come from New York for the ceremony.

The convention closes Friday with announcement of results of officer elections.

School Lunch Plan Likely To Continue

Officials Are Confident of Getting Funds After May 15.

Equipment Is Greatest Worry of Summer Program.

Confidence that funds will be provided for continuation of the school lunch program when the EWA disbands after May 15 was expressed by school officials last night.

Far more concern was expressed over equipping the lunch program to meet health requirements when the warm weather sets in. The central kitchen, on Wisconsin avenue northwest, it is pointed out, is not equipped with screens, nor are the schoolrooms in which the lunches are served.

A summer program also would entail special provisions for transportation of the food and preserving it in the schools until the lunch hour.

Mrs. Katherine McF. Ansley, director of the lunch program, declared that she "would cross this bridge when she comes to it."

The Board of Education, it was explained by school officials, has not discussed the financing of the program after May 15 because this problem rests with District relief officials. As long as there are children in need of food in Washington funds will be provided to care for them, board members said.

Another check of the number of children receiving the lunches is expected to be ordered by the Board of Education next month to determine the summer needs.

More than 7,000 children are being served at present. Seventy percent went to their schools every day during the Easter holidays to get lunches.

Schulte Bat Leader as Nats Rally to Trim A's, 4-3, Ending Streak

Outfielder's Homer Nets 3 Tallies

the same section of the stands that Schulte picked for his fine effort dealocked the pastiming. Had his support been alert in that inning, however, Thomas would have won with plenty to spare. It was the sluggish fielding by Ossie Bluege that paved the way for those two runs.

Mahaffey Too Wild.

The A's as well as the Nationals, had a hurler go all the way. Roy or Popeye, if you prefer, Mahaffey did fairly well, but he was too wild for his own good. In addition to the ten hits, he yielded five passes and one of these was converted into a score.

Almost a third of the Washington hitting was done by Moe Berg. He combed Mahaffey for three hits, one a two-bagger. None figured in the scoring, though. Most of the Mack pounding was done by Jimmy Foxx and Pinkey Higgins, of whom it could be expected, and Hayes, the rookie who had been a soft one for the Washington pitchers in previous contests. Higgins had a perfect day with four, while the other two got three each. And there was nothing flukey about the trio thumped by Hayes, the newcomer.

This Washington team leaves them on the bases with utter abandon. In the first inning, after two were out, every base was filled with a single by Manush and walks by Cronin and Schulte. Three were stranded when Kuhel flied to the leftfielder.

Two more of the Cronin crew were left on in the third, but the Athletics did better in this round. It was a fumble by Bluege that let in the run. One was out when passes to Warstler and Finney and an infield single by Cramer filled the sacks. Foxx rapped smartly down the third-base line and Bluege scratched about to let Warstler score. Then Bluege regained his pose to take McNair's scorching slam and initiate a double play.

The Nationals' attack was notably impotent in the fourth. Kuhel began the inning with a double and Enver progressed. Both Bluege and Berg popped to the first-baseman and Thomas gave the centerfielder an easy chance.

Weak Again in Fifth.

It was as weak again in the fifth. Stone doubled after Myer had struck out. Manush was helpless, grounding to the shortstop. Cronin walked, but Schulte's best was a high one to McNair.

Washington finally took the lead in the seventh, thanks to Fred Schulte and also Bill Warstler, the second baseman of the Macks. Myer walked to begin the inning, but Stone gave the left fielder a soft one. Manush gave Warstler a double play grounder, too, but Warstler threw wildly past the middle sack. Cronin popped out and disgustedly threw away his bat. Schulte, though, sent the ball soaring into the upper left-field stand for a homer, and three Washington runs scored.

But the A's crashed the home-run line in the summary in the eigth to make everything even. With one out, Higgins got his fourth successive hit, a single to left. It should not have been one, though. Bluege played the drive poorly and balked Cronin, who might have been in line to check the ball. After the ball rolled unmolested to the outfield, Hayes, an easy mark in the other games here, hooked the ball into the upper left-field seats for a homer that tied the score. Thomas did not deserve that, however.

But they made it up for Tommy in the ninth.

Maryland U., Tarheels Tie At Top

Share Southern Honors; Generals, Jackets Lead in State.

RICHMOND, Va., April 22 (AP).—Washington and Lee and Randolph-Macon carried their perfect record in Virginia baseball through another week, but each of them looked back today on dangerously close calls.

The Generals, apparently whipped soundly by Virginia Tech, uncorked a ninth-inning rally to score three runs to tie the score and then went ahead in the tenth inning to win the week's most thrill-packed contest.

William and Mary's Indians whose State championship bid was dealt a setback by the University of Virginia Cavaliers were out in front in the Virginia Conference race with shutout victories over Richmond and Roanoke. The Indians tried hard to win yesterday from Virginia after Elliott's wildness had cost them four runs in the first inning. They picked up three off the Cavalier Ace, Orlin Rogers, who held them sufficiently in check to win, 4 to 3.

Whipped to the pinnacle by the stout pitching arm of Ralph Ruble, Maryland's Old Liners today shared the Southern Conference baseball leadership with the Tarheels of North Carolina.

Three of the four victories in Maryland's victory chain are shutout contributions of the phenomenal Ruble, who rested up yesterday while the Old Liners pulled out a 6-to-5 victory over Virginia Military Institute without his assistance.

Far and away the most impressive pitcher in the loop this season, the Maryland ace in three Southern Conference engagements has limited the opposition to 13 hits, while pitching scoreless baseball through 28 consecutive innings. He had to go 10 innings to whip Virginia.

Braves Halt Win Streak Of Giants

Peel's Homer With Man on Base in 9th Falls Short of Tie.

NEW YORK, April 22 (AP).—The Boston Braves hammered Fred Fitzsimmons around in the early innings today and bludgeoned out the first victory any National League team has scored over the World Champion Giants since the season started. The score was 6 to 5.

Since the campaign opened the New Yorkers had scored five straight triumphs, and they didn't lose their first decision without a real battle. Trailing 5-1 at the end of the fourth inning, they staged a comeback while young Johnny Salveson and Joe Bowman halted the Boston attack and fell just one run short of a tie after Homer Peel clouted a pinch home run in the ninth with Paul Richards on base.

Frankhouse Goes In.

That blow finished Dutch Brandt, who had hurled a good game, and Fred Frankhouse stepped in to retire the last two batsmen, fanning pinch batsman Frank O'Doul for the final out.

The Braves bunched their blows off Fitzsimmons to score their first two runs on three singles in the opening inning. Joe Moore got one back with a homer in the same inning, but in the third Wally Berger walloped a homer with two mates aboard to give the Braves a safe lead and finish Fitzsimmons' tenure on the hill. Bill Urbanski, who collected three hits, drove home the sixth Boston tally and the only one off Salveson, in the fourth.

New York didn't get its comeback started until the sixth, when Joe Moore doubled and came home on Ryan's out and Manager Bill Terry's single. In the eighth Terry got an infield hit, Melott was passed and Travis Jackson drove the manager in with a single.

44,631 Watch Yanks Down Red Sox

Gomez in Form as Mates Score 8-to-1 Victory; Rolfe, Combs Hurt.

BOSTON, April 22 (AP).—Vernon "Lefty" Gomez, the strike-out king, was in midseason form today when the New York Yankees slaughtered three Boston Red Sox pitchers for an 8-1 victory before an overflow crowd of 44,631 cash customers. More than 6,000 others were refused admittance to the enlarged Fenway Park.

This Sabbath crowd boosted the Red Sox's attendance for six games to 145,000, a new attendance record for Boston.

"Dusty" Rhodes opened for the Red Sox and collapsed in the fifth, when the visitors scored three runs on one hit. A homer over the left field wall by Chapman with one on accounted for two of the counters. Combs and Crosetti were passed and long flies by Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig accounted for the other run.

Rolfe, Combs Hurt.

Two of the Yanks were injured. "Red" Rolfe, rookie shortstop, banged his injured ankle sliding into first base and Combs hit himself with a batted ball. Both had to retire, but club officials said they would be back in the line-up by Tuesday.

Warneke Hurls Second 1-Hit Triumph

Cubs Slaughter Cards for 22 Hits to Win, 15 to 2; Dizzy Dean Routed.

ST. LOUIS, April 22 (AP).—Lon Warneke, brilliant young right hander, served up his second one-hit performance of the youthful baseball season today as the Chicago Cubs slaughtred the eminent Dizzy Dean, his kid brother, Paul, and two other Cardinal pitchers to win, 15-2.

While Warneke was turning in his one-hit masterpiece, duplicating his feat in the Cubs' opener against Cincinnati, the heavy-hitting Cubs were landing on the brother Dean, Jim Winford and Clarenece Heise for 22 safe blows, including home runs by Chuck Klein and Babe Herman.

Jim Collins made the only Cardinal hit, a double in the fifth, after Virgil Davis had walked. Davis scored on a passed ball, Collns going to third. A fly to the outfield by Gene Moore sent Collins home.

The Cubs started their bombardment at the outset, hammering over four runs in the first inning. Except for the help given him by Woody English, who fanned twice in the inning, it might have been even worse for talkative Dizzy.

The victory enabled the Cubs to remain undefeated. It was their fifth straight victory.

Pirates Rally in Ninth To Nose Out Reds, 5-4

Cincinnati, April 22 (AP).—Despite the heavy and timely hitting of Manager Bob O'Farrell, of the Cincinnati Reds, the Pittsburgh Pirates were able to push over a run in the ninth inning here today to defeat the Red Legs, 5 to 4, and even their current abbreviated series.

The visitors fell on Si Johnson in the opening inning, scoring four runs and putting two other potential tallies on base before a single man was out. Johnson was relieved and replaced by Larry Benton, who gave way after the second inning to Joe Shaute.

Both Benton and Shaute held the Pirates in complete subjection until the ninth, when a walk—Shaute's only pass in the seven innins he pitched — a single and a long fly tallied the winning run.

Aiming at Sun Beau's Mark, Trainer Wants Equipoise to Run Next at Pimlico

Star Entered In All Large Stakes

Gallant Fox's Record Passed, Next Aim is Phar Lap's.

NEW YORK, April 22 (AP).—Having successfully returned to the attack on Sun Beau's all-time money winning record, C. V. Whitney's Equipoise was back at his daily routine today while Trainer T. J. Healy awaited word from the handicappers before deciding when and where his famous 6-year-old charge will make his next start.

Returning from the scene of Equipoise's victorious 1934 debut in the Philadelphia Handicap at Ravre de Grace yesterday, Healy discussed the prospects of the Son of Pennant reaching his objective before the end of the season. The $5,800 won by "Ekky" on the Philadelphia boosted his total for five glamorous years of racing to $328,770, just a notch above Gallant Fox and less than $4,000 short of the earnings of Phar Lap which stands in second place. Far ahead, however, is Sun Beau with a total of $376,744.

May Run at Pimlico.

"Equipoise is in the hands of the handicappers," said Healy. "I want to start him in the Dixie at Pimlico May 5, but it all depends on what weight he is assigned. After all, it is still early in the season. He was brought back to the races for on reason—to beat Sun Beau's mark. To achieve that aim he has been entered in every important stake. But whether he starts in all of them again depends on the handicappers."

To the question whether he considered Equipoise a better than last year the veteran trainer replied: "That's a question you should not ask me for public print. After all, he is a handicap horse and weight brings them all together."

Healy pointed out, however, that the colt had grown a full inch and put on 100 pounds during the winter season in Kentucky. No more can he be correctly called the "little chestnut," for he stands 16.3

Wants to Avenge Loss.

Confident that "Ekky" can run any distance, Healy said he planned to give the champion a chance to avenge a beating he took in the Jockey Club Gold Cup over 2 miles at Belmont Park last fall. It was one of the two times Equipoise did not have his nose in front at the finish during 1933.

"He was a very unsound horse in the Gold Cup," said Healy. "In fact, he should have never started. As it was, I think he made a very creditable showing. As for his defeat by Osculator in the Havre de Grace Handicap, it was the case of a razor-sharp, lightly weighted horse beating a heavily weighted horse which had been trough a hard season.

150-Mile Road Race Won by Louie Meyer

The winner's time was 2 hours 56 minutes 40 seconds.

Pemberton Iron Man.

Norman Pemberton played the iron-man role yesterday, pitching the Stantons to a double victory over the Cardinals, 7 to 5 and 5 to 4 on No. 4 diamond of the Monument Grounds. Hilton and Hersell starred for the winners.

The Oakland Oaks, of the Pacific Coast League, have not played a game in their home town since they won the pennant there in 1912 at Freeman's Park. Since then all the "home" games of the Oaks have been played in another town—in Emeryville. Emeryville is a city of about a dozen square blocks, and in it is located the Oaks' ball park. The town is surrounded by Oakland and the San Francisco Bay.

The all-time record for continuous talking in Congress was made by Senator William Vincent Allen (Populist), of Nebraska, who in 1893 talked 14 hours without stopping. He was speaking against a bill which would repeal the silver purchase clause of the Sherman Act of 1890. Other Senators have held the floor for longer periods, but they used various tactics to stall for time during which they could rest.

The Braille Institute, which has the strangest printing plant in the world, is currently publishing a Bible which contains 21 large volumes, each as big as an old-fashioned photo album. These volumes are written in Braille script, which enables blind persons to read by the sense of touch.

The institute has furnished the Braille Bible or parts of it to blind people living in Canada, New Zealand, Australia, England, Scotland, France, Italy, Spain, the Philippines, Hawaii, South Africa, India and Egypt as well as the United States.

Havre de Grace, April 22.

Dear Al:

It looks as if Bowie has lost caste as a barometer for Maryland racing figures. The Prince Georges County track barely made the grade this spring and, following the fine winter season in Florida, most turfmen took that fact to mean that this State was in for some tough sledding. However, yesterday has revived hopes for a big year. The crowd was estimated from 18,000 to 25,000 and any figure in between is a record for this track. Not only did the customers come to see but they stayed to bet. Almost half a million—$487,280, to be exact—passed through the mutuel windows. The peak was reached in the feature at $62,206, despite the fact that no show mutuels were sold on the small field.

Good weather and good horses will bring success to Maryland racing, it is evident. Bennings, Inc., did not fare badly yesterday either. We caught the last three winners, including Bright Beauty at $14.50.

BILL.

First race—Evangelist is a well-educated colt and has run in better fields than he encounters tomorrow. Turned in a fine effort over at Bowie. Looks like the spot for graduation purposes. Back Fence was beaten a neck in the mud. May go well even on a hard track. Maple Flower showed speed in that lone try.

Second race—Chips has shown ability at sprint distances and meets a field that should not be beyond her power. Kanal has been out once this season. Any improvement would find this one battling for the main end of the purse. Khamain to complete the money picture.

Third race—Bubbler appears to outclass this field and just why the Bradley interests have dropped him down here I do not know. However, I understand the colt is sound. Dancing Mack is a front runner of parts. Figures for the place. Energetic Boy runs on occasions.

Fourth race—I'm going to try to make Forbound, of the C. V. Whitney string, take care of these. This one was a speedy juvenile and is reported to be ready for a good race. Can't Remember comes from a smart barn. May lead Blue for Blue to the wire.

Fifth race—Brown Wisdom ran well at Houston and, while he will have to show his best effort to score here, I lean toward him. Ladino is as fit as recent races show, but would prefer a soft course. Butter Beans can better that last and can not be counted out of the struggle.

Sixth race—War Tide has disappointed several times this spring, but should be good enough to lead this kind of a field. Politen, a fresh plater, and High Socks appear best of the others.

Seventh race—Peedeeque, I'm told, prefers a fast track despite the general opinion that she is strictly an off-track proposition. Seems to have this race in the bag unless a larger price is wanted. Gallic and Retribution for the place and show awards.

Don Fraser Take Ski Race by Half Length

Mount Rainier, Wash., April 22 (AP).—Don Fraser, Seattle, flashing down the snowy sides of mighty Mounty Rainier for 5 miles at speeds often approaching a mile a minute, won the Pacific Northwest silver skis race today by less than one-half the length of his shining hickory staves. His time was 10 minutes 49 3-5 seconds.

Carlton Wiegel, Paradise Ski Club, was two-fifths of a second behind the Seattle Ski Club youngster as they dashed across the finish line in Paradise Valley. One hundred yards behind the leader was Alf Moystad of the Seattle Ski Club.

Paul Sceva, jr., Paradise Club, won the junior race and the woman's race was won by Marguerite Strizek, Seattle Ski Club.

3 Eastern Horses Gain Derby Favor

Singing Wood, Cavalcade Particularly Liked.

Louisville, Ky., April 22 (AP).—The approach of the sixtieth running of the Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs May 5 finds three Eastern eligibles, Singing Wood, Cavalcade and Discovery, increasing in favor, while nominees training in the West are fading slightly from the spotlight.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Singing Wood, last year's leading juvenile money winner, and Mrs. I. D. Sloane's Cavalcade, in the money in 9 of his 11 starts last year and never worse than fourth, are particularly favored among the Eastern contingent because, aside from excellent workouts, they have shown themselves capable of running well over both fast and slow tracks and "a good horse can win on any kind of track," is an old turf adage.

Glasscock to Judge.

Fredericksburg, Va., April 22 (Spl.).—Waugh Glasscock, noted Virginia sportsman, will serve as one of the judges at the Fredericksburg Horse Show on May 29 and 30, show officials announce.

Mr. Glasscock, a resident of Middleburg, is joint master of the famed Prince William hounds. The other judges will be selected next week.

Lions Hit Sports Pages Again—With Baseball!

New York, April 23 (AP).—Three months ago you couldn't keep their names off the sports pages—Mad Anthony Matal, Al Barabas, Ed Brominski, Owen McDowell, Harry Chase, Joe Linehan, Frank King and the rest.

Now they're back again, seven of the Lions of Columbia, who swept across the continent to batter Stanford back in the mud of the Rose Bowl New Year's Day. They're playing baseball now, not football, and the cast isn't quite complete, for it lacks Cliff Montgomery, the brilliant field general, murderous Bill Nevel, Joe Richavich and Newt Wilder of the eleven that upset the pigskin world so completely.

But the seven footballers who have taken over every job except pitching and third base on the Lion varsity are still chiefly football players. There are, however, a couple of big league possibilities among them—namely, Barabas, the sophomore who ran with a hidden ball for Columbia's only touchdown against the Indians, and Brominski, who helped block the way for him.

Brominski has Lame Arm.

Barabas, a fleet center fielder, is the hardest hitter on the team, while Brominski, a junior, is one of the best catchers in college baseball. A shoulder injury, suffered in the line of duty as a blocking back, has weakened Brominski's throwing arm, however, and may keep him from the chance he'd like to get.

Matal, the red-headed end who nearly separated backs from their means of locomotion with his tackles last fall, is quite a second baseman. McDowell, who played the opposite end, is captain and first baseman, with Joe Lineham, best of the ball carrying reserves, at shortstop.

No Illusions for Matal.

"Baseball's a lot of fun," says Matal, who hit .470 in the Eastern Intercollegiate League as a sophomore, but only .295 last year, "but college ball doesn't mean much. The competition's not too keen. Most of the pitching is ordinary, and a fellow's a chump to think that if he shows up well here he's got a chance to make baseball his livelihood.

"Pro sport of any kind is out as far as I'm concerned. The sooner a fellow gets to work after graduation and forgets about being an athlete the better off he'll be in the end."

Of course, Matal would ponder deeply if a major league club offered him a contract. Lineham, a good hitter, is interested in pro ball, and so are McDowell and Brominski, the latter a .330 clouter last season. McDowell hit .430 his sophomore year.

Paul Kritchell, the New York Yankee scout who specializes in collegians, having bagged Pitchers Ray White, from Columbia, and Johnny Broaca, from Yale, last spring, is watching Brominski most closely.

"He might do," he says, "if his arm gets stronger."

Maryland Cup Draws Star Entries

Hotspur and Troublemaker Among Horses to Vie on Saturday.

BALTIMORE, April 22 (AP).—Sixteen entries, in tiptop shape, and many of them already winners, were entered today for the forty-first annual running of Maryland's most famous jumping classic, the Maryland Hunt Cup, next Saturday in Worthington Valley.

Such notables as Hotspur II, recent winner of My Lady's Manor Point to Point; Capt. Kettle, winner of last year's cup; Troublemaker, 1932 winner and holder of the cup's course record, and Vaudeville, winner of Saturday's Grand National, were in the lists announced by Charles B. Reeves, secreary of the Maryland Hunt Cup Association.

Most of the remaining jumpers have appeared in previous steeplechases this season in Virginia, South Carolina and Maryland and have either placed or finished in show positions. Troublemaker's record set over the grueling grind of 4 miles of natural country and assorted obstacles was expected to come near being equaled. It is 8 minutes 51 3-5 seconds, and was hung up in 1932.

Sooners Recall Race for Land 45 Years Ago

Yarns of Bloody Days in Guthrie "Debunked" by Veteran Writer.

Guthrie, Okla., April 22 (AP).—Oklahomans recalled today the memorable rush for homesteads of 45 years ago—and one of the men who was there took occasion to "debunk" stories of free blood-spilling as the Sooners raced for land.

Guthrie, a capital founded in a day, flipped back the pages of history to present a study in contrasts. There were bearded stalwarts in boots and 10-gallon hats, but without the "six-guns" that decorated every belt in 1889. And they appeared against a background of a modern city, not silhouetted against the empty horizon.

However, even in those days, there was but little gunplay, said Fred Wenner, veteran newspaper correspondent.

"All the stories of murders, riots, holdups and bank robberies following the opening were written 15 or 20 years later by penny-a-liners with vivid imaginations," he said.

"There was really little news of the kind that the public expected out of Oklahoma that first year—there were no killings, no robberies here in Guthrie.

"True, everybody carried a gun at the opening because he thought that was the thing to do but none of them was ever used except to bluff, to drive tent pegs or to give a fire alarm—in fact the great majority of fellows packing guns were really afraid to fire them."

From Wenner's point of view, the greatest difficulty encountered was that of transmitting news. There was only one telegraph wire and railroad business was given the right of way.

"For many days and nights," he said, "all our reports went by mail or were carried to Arkansas City, Kans., by accommodating trainmen to be wired from there."

Wenner came to Oklahoma to cover the run for the New York Herald, the Chicago Times, the Cleveland Press and the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, "expecting to stay a few weeks, but after 45 years, I am still here and still writing about the opening."

Nearly 500 persons attended the annual Eighty-niners banquet in Oklahoma City last night.

Culbertson on Bridge

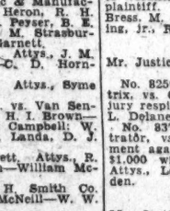
Safety First.

That the wily old fox of the bridge table, Mr. Sidney S. Lenz, has not lost his cunning is attested to by his play of the following hand in a Howell game in a prominent New York club recently.

East, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



Mr. Lenz.

Over East's opening bid of one club Mr. Lenz took matters into his own hands and, disdaining such trifles as cue bids and the like, bid six spades, which was passed by West and North and, after considerable thought, also by East, who wistfully contemplated doubling but was probably too much in awe of his famous and ferocious adversary.

When the Dummy went down after West's opening lead of the club Queen Mr. Lenz saw at a glance that his contract was safe if the diamonds broke three and two. But since the hall-mark of an expert is to allow for bad breaks and to "take out insurance against them," he proceeded to plan the play in such a way as to leave as little as possible to chance. Carefully ruffing the club lead with a high trump, he put the Dummy in the lead with the eight of trumps and led the Knave of hearts toward the closed hand. East's duck at this point can hardly be criticized, since it was impossible for him to divine Mr. Lenz's insidious plot and thereby checkmate it. As a matter of fact, viewed from a strictly non-double-Dummy angle, since East's singleton trump had been removed on the first lead to Dummy and he therefore could not prevent a possible heart ruff it would have been a distinct error had he played the Ace. After winning the trick in his own hand with the Queen of hearts, Mr. Lenz proceeded to lead out every one of his trumps. East, in order to guard the diamond suit and also retain the heart Ace, was forced to discard all of his clubs and a small heart, so that when five cards were left in each hand, his distribution was identical with that of Mr. Lenz's—namely, four diamonds and the Ace of hearts. Mr. Lenz now laid down the Ace and King of diamonds, and when West failed to follow to the second diamond, nonchalantly threw East into the lead with the heart Ace and claimed the last two tricks.

Tomorrow's Hand.

South, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.

A FINE SITUATION! WHILE WE WERE WAITING FOR SOME CUSTOMER TO HOLLER THAT HE'D BEEN ROBBED, A RED-HOT BUSTED INTO THIS OFFICE AND TOOK US TO TOWN.
WHAT INCINERATES ME IS THAT WE... DETECTIVES... CAN'T EVEN PROVE WE WERE ROBBED.
YOU FOUND SAMPLES OF HIS WHISKERS IN THE DOOR OF THE SAFE WE RENTED WITH THE OFFICE. IT'S OUR SAFE..... TEMPORARILY, ANYHOW.
LEGALLY SPEAKING, WE OWN THE SAFE BUT SOMEBODY ELSE OWNS WHAT'S IN IT.
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. 4-23
IN OTHER WORDS, WE'RE NOT ALLOWED TO OPEN OUR OWN SAFE— IF WE COULD.
EVERYTHING IS VERY CONFUSING. IF WE WERE WORKING ON A BIG CASE NOW I'D SAY THIS ROBBERY WAS FRAMED BY THE OTHER SIDE TO MAKE US FEEL LIKE WE DO.
WELL, HERMAN, I WON'T SAY WE'RE TERRIBLY MIXED UP, BUT ON THE OTHER HAND THINGS ARE NOT VERY CLEAR TO US, EITHER.
THE REASON WE SEEM KIND OF CONFUSED IS BECAUSE THIS SMALL TIME STUFF, BURGLARY, ISN'T UP OUR ALLEY. WE'RE SPECIALISTS IN...WELL, ALMOST ANY OTHER SORT OF CASE.

JOE JINKS, Featuring Dynamite Dunn Joe Knows! By Llanuza

TWO DOWN—AND THREE TO GO! DYNAMITE HAS JUST SQUARED OFF AGAINST HIS THIRD OPPONENT, PUDDLER GORKLE.....
WHAT'S THIS GUY TRYIN' TO DO— CREEP UP ON DYNAMITE?
NO—THAT'S THE PUDDLER'S FAMOUS CROUCH STYLE
WHAT'S IT FAMOUS FOR—LOOKIN' FUNNY?
NEVER MIND HOW FUNNY IT LOOKS— IT'S GOIN' TO GIVE GORKLE A BIG ADVANTAGE
SURE—HE WON'T HAVE SO FAR TO FALL!

BOY, I'M MIGHTY PROUD OF THAT BEAR! IT SURE PUTS THE POLISH ON MY TROPHY ROOM.' SET A TRAP RIGHT IN FRONT OF HER DEN.' HAD A HARD TIME SHOOTIN' HER EVEN THEN, BECAUSE SHE WOULDN'T STAND STILL!
YOU OUGHT TO DO YOUR HUNTING IN A ZOO.' WONDER YOU DON'T BRAG ABOUT STARVIN' HER CUBS TO DEATH.' IF THERE'S ANY STRAY TRAPS OUT IN THE WOODS THE NEXT TIME YOU GO TROPHY COLLECTIN', HERES HOPING YOU'RE STEPPIN' HEAVY.'

THESE LITTLE VIOLETS I PLUCKED THIS MORNING- HOW THEY REMIND ME OF MILLIE'S LOVELY EYES- HOW DIFFERENT THIS SPRING SEEMS FROM LAST- AS I WANDERED THROUGH THE WOODS, THE RUSHES SEEMED TO SIGH FOR MILLIE- THE TRICKLING BROOK SEEMED TO WHISPER HER NAME- THE BIRDS SEEMED TO SING OF HER BEAUTY- LOST TO ME NOW FOREVER-

AH! WHEN I THINK OF WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN—
SAY- IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN WORSE- YOU'VE GOTTEN ALONG SINGLE SO FAR- AFTER ALL MATRIMONY IS NOTHING BUT AN INSANE DESIRE TO PAY SOME WOMAN'S BOARD-THAT WILL BE ALL FROM YOU—

DICK TRACY After That Car!

YES SIR- THAT'S SPALDONI!
AND TRACY WANTS HIM! HOT DOG! I'M GOING TO TRAIL THAT CAR!
BUT ALAS! HE INSTANTLY REALIZES HE HASN'T A CHANCE OF KEEPING PACE WITH THE SPEEDING AUTO ON HIS BICYCLE...
HEY CABBY! LET ME HOLD MY BIKE ON THE RUNNING BOARD OF YOUR CAB WHILE YOU FOLLOW THAT CAR! EH? I'VE GOT DOUGH.

Walt Mason, Himself

The Morrow.

In the shadows we are groping, always trusting, always hoping that tomorrow will be sunny, and the fog will blow away. "Dreary rain will cease to drizzle, and the good old sun will sizzle, and we'll all be hunkydory when the sun's on deck," we say. That's the spirit that sustains us when affliction jars and pains us, we are always looking forward from the present day of grief; true, today is pretty rocky, and our plans are going balky, but tomorrow's in the offing, and tomorrow brings relief. In our days of desolation ruin threatened all the Nation and the bottom would have fallen from our cherished native land, had we spent our time in wailing over bulwarks crashing, failing, but we thought about tomorrow and the comfort close to hand. We can stand a lot of sorrow when we feel a bright tomorrow is encamped upon the threshold, and is knocking at the door; we can cease our doubting, fearing, and remark, "The skies are clearing, and we'll witness a revival of the happiness of yore."
